THE YEAR IN HATE & EXTREMISM

HATE GROUPS TOP 1000

Led by antigovernment 'Patriot' groups, the radical right expands dramatically
for the second year in a row

The Arizonification of America

BY MARK POTOK, EDITOR

WHEN EVEN LEADING CONSERVATIVES worry out loud about the right-wing vitriol and demonizing propaganda so commonplace in contemporary America, you've got to be concerned about where our country is headed.

This January, former President George W. Bush, speaking in a question-and-answer session at Texas' Southern Methodist University, warned that the nation seemed to be reliving its worst anti-immigrant moments. "My point is, we've been through this kind of period of isolationism, protectionism, nativism" before, he said. "I'm a little concerned that we may be going through the same period" again.

In a column around the same time, conservative commentator Linda Chavez, a Fox News analyst and former Reagan White House official, warned against new nativist efforts to end birthright citizenship. "Now, egged on by radical population control groups, some Republicans want to reinterpret the Constitution and 11 decades of jurisprudence to subvert the 14th Amendment," she wrote. "They are on a fool's errand that will do great damage to the Republican Party."

Roll Call executive editor Morton Kondracke wrote the same month that we are seeing "the Arizonification of America," a reference to the state that last year passed the harshest anti-immigrant law in memory. "It has become a state of Minuteman vigilantism, death threats against politicians and judges, talk-radio demagoguery, and bullying of Latinos and rival politicians," he said.

And neoconservative Bill Kristol, writing this February, worried about the "hysteria" in contemporary conservatism that he sees exemplified in a particularly voluble Fox News host. "When Glenn Beck rants about the caliphate taking over the Middle East from Morocco to the Philippines, and lists (invents?) the connections between caliphate-promoters and the American left, he brings to mind no one so much as Robert Welch and the John Birch Society," Kristol wrote. "He's marginalizing himself, just as his predecessors did back in the early 1960s."

Given these warnings from leading conservatives, it is not surprising that the Southern Poverty Law Center's latest count found that the number of hate groups operating in America last year had risen to 1,002 from 932 in 2009. The number of nativist vigilante groups was up, too, from 309 in 2009 to 319 in 2010. And there was truly explosive growth in the antigovernment "Patriot" movement, which added 312 new groups last year, skyrocketing 61% from 512 in 2009 to 824 last year.

As we explain in this issue, this dramatic growth of the radical right for the second consecutive year is related to anger over the changing racial make-up of the country, the ailing economy and the spreading of demonizing propaganda and other kinds of hate speech in the political mainstream.

The white-hot political atmosphere is not limited to hard-line nativist politicians, conspiracy-mongering cable news hosts, or even openly radical hate groups. During the same month when most of these conservative commentaries were written, the nation witnessed an extraordinary series of events that highlighted the atmosphere of political extremism.

On Jan. 8, a Tucson man opened fire in a parking lot on U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, Democrat of Arizona, killing six people, critically wounding the congresswoman and badly injuring another 12 people. Giffords' assailant appeared to be severely mentally ill, but he also seemed to have absorbed certain ideas from the radical right, including the notion that the federal government is evil.

Six days later, a neo-Nazi named Jeffrey Harbin was arrested in Arizona for possessing 12 grenade-like devices packed with ball bearings — "to maximize human carnage," as a federal prosecutor put it. A member of the National Socialist Movement, Harbin was heading for the border when he was arrested.

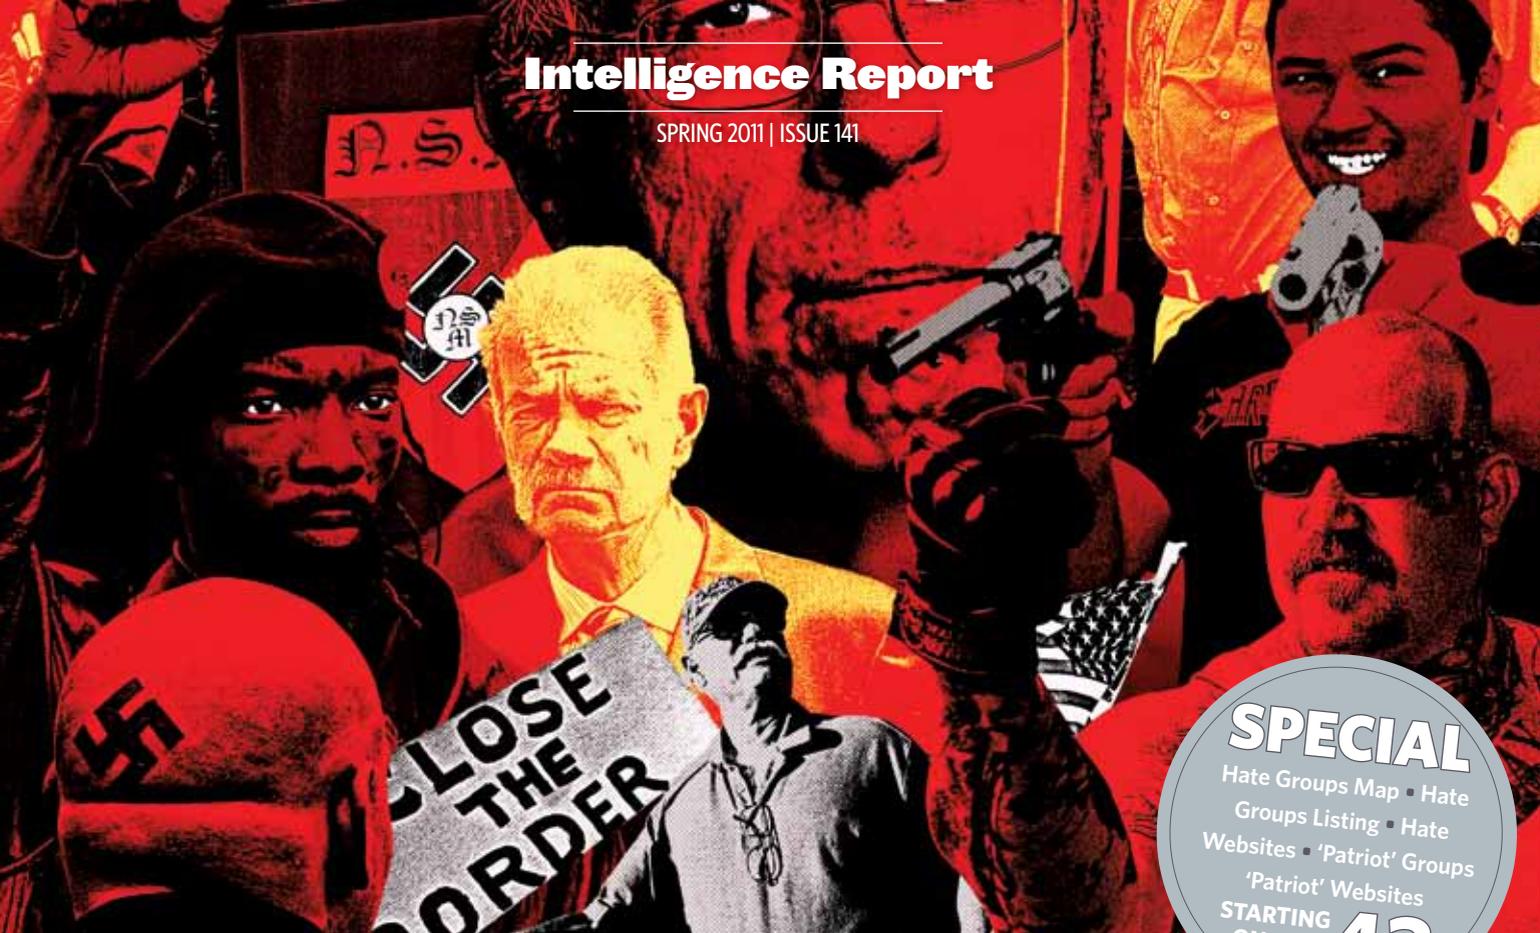

Three days after that, on Jan. 17, police in Spokane, Wash., found and defused a sophisticated anti-personnel bomb that had been hidden along the route of a Martin Luther King Jr. Day parade. Officials said they were looking into local hate groups as part of their search for the would-be mass murderer.

And on Jan. 24, police in Michigan arrested a man in a car loaded with M-80s and other explosives in a parking lot outside one of the nation's largest mosques, packed at the time with 500 mourners at a funeral. He was charged with making a terroristic threat and possessing explosives with unlawful intent.

We are living in a deeply polarized and dangerous moment, and that may be nowhere more obvious than in the state of Arizona, as Mort Kondracke pointed out. Perhaps no one captured that better than Pima County Sheriff Clarence Dupnik, speaking at a press conference after the Tucson assassination attempt.

"[L]ook at unbalanced people, how they respond to the vitriol that comes out of certain mouths about tearing down the government," the sheriff said. "The anger, the hatred, the bigotry that goes on in this country is getting to be outrageous and, unfortunately, Arizona has become sort of the capital. We have become the mecca for prejudice and bigotry."

Sadly, much of the country is following Arizona's lead. ▲

40 The Year in Hate and Extremism

Driven by anger over the country's changing racial demographics, the continuing harsh economy and demonizing propaganda found increasingly in the political mainstream, the number of radical-right groups has expanded dramatically. For the second year in a row, the growth was led by the antigovernment "Patriot" movement, which saw more than 300 new organizations appear over a 12-month period.

21 Over the Cliff

Cliff Kincaid has spent more than 30 years at Accuracy in Media, a far-right organization that tirelessly attacks the "liberal" media. In that time, he's cranked out reams of material savaging global institutions, political liberals, global warming theorists and the Catholic Church. But he reserves a special loathing for gay people.

32 Shariah Shock

Virtually all constitutional scholars and other legal experts agree that Shariah law — Muslim religious law — could never be imposed on Americans. But a measure banning the use of Shariah law passed overwhelmingly in Oklahoma after sponsor Rex Duncan claimed Americans were "in a war for the survival of our country."

35 The Year in Nativism

The anti-immigration movement savored a major victory last year with the adoption of Arizona's controversial S.B. 1070, the harshest nativist law in memory. But as their issues were increasingly adopted by the more mainstream political right, the rate of growth of hard-line nativist and vigilante groups slowed to a trickle.

Tony Perkins of the Family Research Council said critics of anti-gay religious right groups had refused to debate the issues. In fact, the criticism of his organization and others began with a televised debate between Perkins and an SPLC official.

RELIGIOUS RIGHT

Anti-Gay Groups, on the Defensive After Criticism, Lash Out

When the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) last November announced that it would be adding several so-called “pro-family” organizations to its list of hate groups because of their history of using known falsehoods to attack gay and lesbians, the religious right and its allies responded with a call to “Start Debating/Stop Hating,” saying the SPLC was seeking to stifle discussion of the issue. That was ironic, given that just a few days after the announcement, Intelligence Report Editor Mark Potok debated Tony Perkins of the Family Research Council (FRC) on MSNBC.

The FRC, which was one of the named groups, led the effort in December to take out a full-page advertisement in two Washington, D.C., newspapers. The ads accused “elements of the radical Left” of trying to “shut down informed discussion of policy issues” — decrying those who attempt to suppress debate “through personal assaults that aim only to malign an opponent’s character.” The ad was signed by 22 conservative members of Congress, three governors and several of the listed organizations.

In a response to the advertisement, the SPLC pointed to a number of examples that suggested that it was the groups, in fact, that were malign-ing peoples’ characters. These included an FRC booklet entitled “Homosexual Activists Work to Normalize Sex with Boys” that claimed “one of the primary goals of the homosexual rights movement is to abolish all age of consent laws and to eventually recognize pedophiles as the ‘prophets’ of a new sexual order.”

The exchange came at a time when religious-right leaders have accused the federal government of being beholden to a “homosexual agenda” that purportedly includes “feminizing”

the armed forces through the repeal of the so-called “Don’t Ask, Don’t Tell” policy; enhanced physical airport pat-downs that supposedly turn on gay security officials; and demonizing an assistant state attorney general who waged a personal smear

Andrew Shirvell, an assistant attorney general in Michigan, was fired after waging a vicious campaign against Chris Armstrong, the University of Michigan student body president. Shirvell, who later said he had done nothing wrong, used his personal blog to accuse Armstrong of attempting to advance a “radical homosexual agenda,” calling him names like “Satan’s representative” and a “privileged pervert.” Michigan Attorney General Mike Cox ultimately fired Shirvell for conduct unbecoming a state employee.

Meanwhile, Virginia lawmaker Eugene Delgaudio claimed last fall that federal transportation officials were motivated to implement new enhanced passenger search procedures by the “homosexual agenda,” not concerns about terrorism.

Delgaudio, a Republican elected to the Loudoun County Board of Supervisors in 1999 and re-elected twice, made the claims in an E-mail sent in his role as president of the conservative nonprofit group Public Advocate of the United States. Calling the U.S. Transportation Security Administration’s (TSA) non-discrimination hiring policy “the federal employee’s version of the Gay Bill of Special Rights,” Delgaudio warned “the next TSA official that gives you an enhanced pat-down could be a practicing homosexual secretly getting pleasure from your submission.”

ANTI-ABORTION EXTREMISM

Would-Be Clinic Bomber Saw Himself as 'Christian Osama'

The militant crusade against abortion providers shows no signs of abating in the aftermath of Dr. George Tiller's 2009 assassination in Kansas — a murder that many in the anti-abortion movement celebrated as a watershed moment. Two years later, threats against abortion providers continue with unabated religious zeal.

One of the epicenters of anti-abortion extremism seems to be in North Carolina, where the FBI in September arrested Justin Carl Moose, the self-professed "Christian counterpart to Osama bin Laden," for conspiring to bomb an abortion clinic. Moose told a confidential FBI informant he was the organizer of a "phantom cell" for the Army of God, a theoretical group (no real structure is known to exist) composed of those who have attacked abortion providers. He used his Facebook page to issue communiqués, even posting detailed bomb-making instructions free for the taking.

FBI agents in Greensboro, N.C., began investigating Moose in early August after Planned Parenthood contacted them and told them that a man was advocating violence against their clinics. Moose was arrested and agreed to plead guilty in exchange for leniency. He faces 20 years in prison and a maximum fine of $250,000, according to a plea agreement filed last November in federal court. He was to be sentenced in March.

Moose's words to an online sympathizer left little doubt about whether he might follow through with his threats: "As far as I'm concerned, nothing is off limits to stop abortion. Anything and everything goes. I have learned a lot from the muslim [sic] terrorists and have no problem using their tactics."

Also in North Carolina, the Rev. Philip "Flip" Benham, director of the Concord-based Operation Save America and a long-time hardliner against abortion, ran into serious legal trouble of his own. In November, the fundamentalist Christian minister was found guilty of stalking a doctor who performs abortions. Benham came to national attention when he began papering neighborhoods with hundreds of Old West-style "Wanted" posters for doctors in Charlotte who perform abortions.

The posters didn't put a price on the doctors' lives, but in the aftermath of Tiller's murder in Kansas, many doctors felt threatened, especially considering the murderous outcome of similar fliers distributed in other states. David Gunn in Florida and George Patterson in Alabama, both doctors, were shot and killed in 1993. Another doctor, John Britton, was murdered a year later in Florida. All were once featured on "wanted" posters.

Meanwhile, investigators have begun looking into whether Tiller's killing was connected to a broad network of radical anti-abortion activists, one of gunman Scott Roeder's former roommates told The Kansas City Star.

Tim Parks, Roeder's friend and former roommate, said he and six others appeared before a grand jury in October for a line of questions focusing on the Bible study group Roeder attended. The group, which met for potlucks and Scripture study, described themselves as Messianic Jews who, unlike mainstream

Rev. Philip "Flip" Benham

Jews, believe that Jesus was the Messiah and that hastening his return would usher in the end of the world.

In Boulder, Colo., Donald Hertz was sentenced to five years of probation for threatening the family of Dr. Warren Hern, one of only a few physicians nationwide who will perform late-term abortions. Prosecutors said Hertz called a clinic last summer and warned that his "associates" in Utah planned to kill Hern and members of his family. At the time of the threats, Hern was under the protection of U.S. Marshals.

HATE IN THE MAINSTREAM

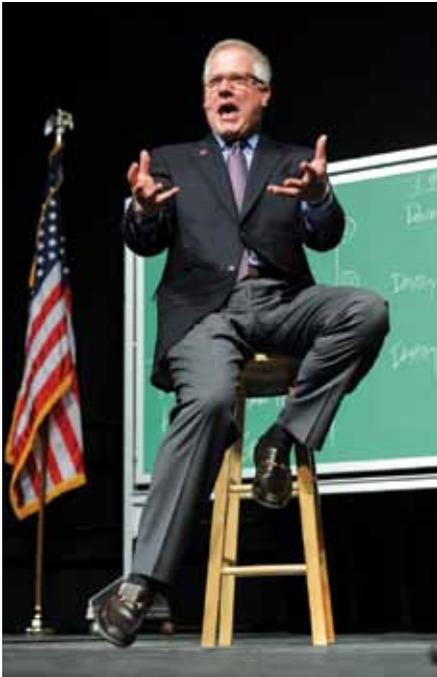

Once Again, Glenn Beck's Views Invoked by Extremists

Three men arrested in 2010 may have been the latest right-wing fanatics inspired to murder or threats of violence by conservative Fox News commentator Glenn Beck's charismatic and sometimes end-times-focused diatribes, according to family members and attorneys.

Kenneth Kimbley, the self-proclaimed leader of the Brotherhood of America Patriots, apparently interpreted Beck's rants as a call to action. At the time of his arrest in July after discussing attacks on local bridges with a federal undercover agent, the 58-year-old had 20,000 rounds of ammunition, a stock of firearms and materials to construct grenades, according to court documents. He also conveyed threats against President Obama to the agent, describing extensive booby traps he had built and proclaiming his militia would "resist in the event the government started rounding up patriots." That is a mainstay claim among militias driven by conspiratorial ideologies that accuse federal agencies of preparing concentration camps to one day round up well-meaning patriots.

Kimbley pleaded guilty in November to unlawful possession of a firearm and attempt to make a firearm in violation of federal law. In his defense, his public defender attested, "Everything said by Mr. Kimbley is no different than what

The “schoolteacher”: There is evidence suggesting several violent extremists took their cues from Glenn Beck, but the Fox News host has denied that his extreme rhetoric and conspiracy-mongering played any part in influencing those who saw him as a mentor.

his idol, TV commentator Glenn Beck, typically states on the air and is protected free speech.”

Kimbley remains in federal custody and faces up to 10 years in prison when he is sentenced this winter. Arrested with Kimbley was Steven Eugene Winegar, 52, who is under house arrest in Harpster, Idaho, until his trial is scheduled.

In April, Charles Alan Wilson was arrested by the FBI for repeatedly threatening to kill U.S. Sen. Patty Murray (D-Wash.) in retribution for her vote for health care reform, so-called “Obamacare.” Wilson was sentenced in October to a year and one day in prison. In a letter submitted to attest to his good character during sentencing, one of Wilson’s cousins said that “his fears were grown and fostered by Beck’s persuasive personality” and that Wilson was “under the spell that Glenn Beck cast, aided by the turbulent times in our economy.”

A third man, Byron Williams, faces counts of attempted murder and a host of weapons charges after a shootout with police officers on his way to San Francisco last summer, where he allegedly planned shootings at the ACLU and the Tides Foundation — two frequent targets of Beck’s rants (the Tides Foundation was almost unknown to the public until Beck began attacking it regularly). Williams later described Beck as “like a schoolteacher on TV.”

Nearly two years ago, extremist Richard Poplawski fatally shot three Pittsburgh police officers when they responded to a domestic dispute at his home. The killings drew attention to the allure of Beck’s rhetoric when a man described as Poplawski’s best friend said the killer was “obsessed” with some of Beck’s theories.

Beck has denied any form of responsibility for the extreme actions of his viewers.

EXTREMIST CULTS

Three Preachers Embroiled in Sex Abuse Scandals

Polygamist and self-proclaimed prophet Warren Jeffs — one of at least three high-profile preachers embroiled in sex abuse scandals — has been extradited to Texas for a trial expected to begin sometime this year.

Jeffs is the imprisoned head of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (FLDS), which has its roots in a split in the Mormon Church in 1890, when the main organization renounced polygamy. FLDS has compounds in southern Utah, northern Arizona, Texas, Colorado, South Dakota, Canada and Mexico. Jeffs was convicted in 2007 for his role in arranging the marriage of an unwilling 14-year-old girl to her 19-year-old cousin six years earlier. That conviction was overturned, but authorities plan to retry him and he remains in prison.

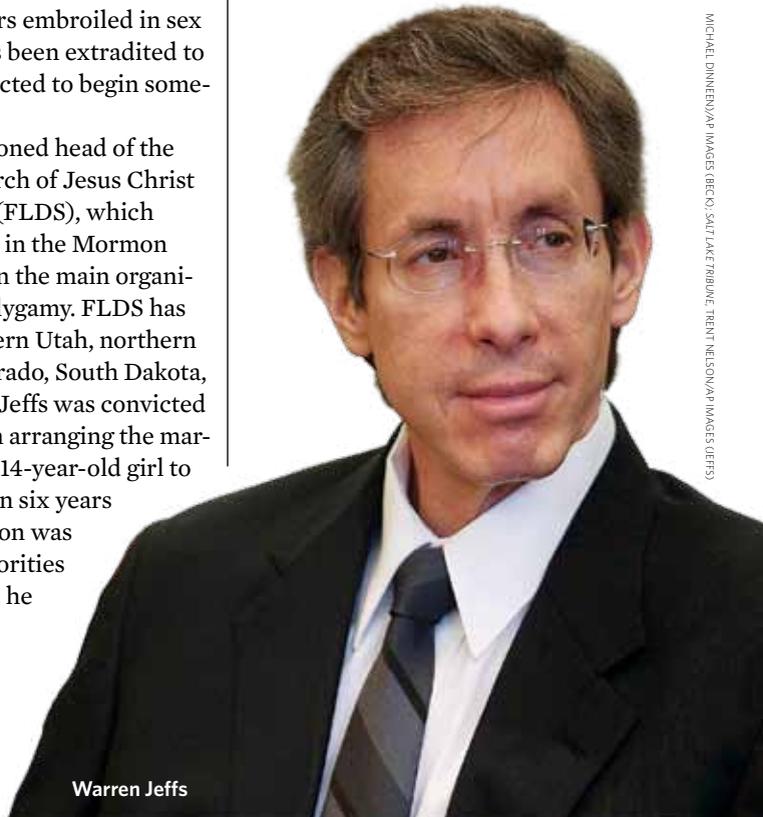

The new charges in Texas stem from a 2008 raid at the Yearning for Zion ranch in Eldorado, Texas, where authorities initially put more than 400 children in state custody on the grounds the girls were being sexually abused and the boys groomed to be sexual predators.

In addition to his controversial teaching on the suitability of young girls for marriage, the rawboned prophet has preached to his more than 10,000 followers that “the black race is the people through which the devil has always been able to bring evil unto the earth,” and that homosexual intimacy “is the worst evil act you can do, next to murder.”

Tony Alamo, another preacher convicted for sexually abusing children, made headlines again when a federal appeals court upheld his conviction for taking underage girls across state lines to sexually exploit them.

Alamo, head of the virulently anti-gay Tony Alamo Christian Ministries, was arrested in 2008 after 100 federal and state investigators raided his compound in Texarkana, Ark., as part of a child pornography investigation involving allegations of physical and sexual abuse, polygamy and underage marriage. During trial, one of his followers testified that Alamo, whose real name is Bernie LaZar Hoffman, had taken an 8-year-old wife.

Alamo was sentenced to 175 years in prison after he was convicted in 2009 on 10 counts of violating the Mann Act, a century-old law originally aimed at stopping women from being sold into prostitution. He is being held in Tucson, Ariz., where he was recently placed in a special wing after he began threatening prosecutors and others connected to his case.

Then there is the case of Bishop Eddie Long. He's accused by four men of misusing his role as pastor, counselor and bishop of the New Birth Missionary Baptist Church in Georgia, one of the largest megachurches in the nation, to coerce them into sexual acts when they were teens. As of press time, both parties in the lawsuit had agreed to mediation to avoid what was expected to be a long and embarrassing civil trial, scheduled this summer in the event of an impasse in negotiations.

The Southern Poverty Law Center in 2007 identified the charismatic pastor as "one of the most virulently homophobic black leaders in the religiously based anti-gay movement." In a videotaped sermon, Long declared, "The problem today, and the reason society is like it is, is because men are being feminized and women are being masculine! You cannot say, 'I was born this way' ... I don't care what scientists say!"

The lawsuit alleges that Long gave the boys gifts of cars, college tuition and overnight trips to curry their favor.

NEO-NAZIS

National Socialist Leader Again Convicted of Threat Charges

Imprisoned former neo-Nazi leader Bill White can't get a break — even when he's broke. In a case that tested the limits of free speech, an all-white jury in Chicago found the ever-garrulous, imprisoned White guilty of using his website to threaten the foreman of a jury that convicted a fellow white supremacist.

White targeted Mark Hoffman, the jury foreman in the 2004 trial of white supremacist Matthew Hale, who was found guilty of soliciting the murder of a federal judge. Years after the trial, White listed Hoffman's address, telephone number and other personal information on his Overthrow.com website and called him a "gay, Jewish anti-racist," adding that he "played a leading role in inciting both the conviction and the harsh sentence that followed."

White's attorneys framed their defense around his First Amendment rights — a point the American Civil Liberties Union (ACLU) in Virginia supported. The ACLU pointed out in a friend-of-the-court brief that First Amendment case law distinguishes between protected free speech and what is known as a "true threat" — a threat that a reasonable third party would take seriously. It argued that White's posting, which did not directly propose violence against Offman, did not amount to a true threat.

The jury, however, disagreed after hearing evidence about the full context of White's website, which contained a plethora of verbal attacks and threats directed at various perceived enemies.

The verdict came just as White was about to finish a two-and-a-half year sentence for making racially charged threats against other enemies. He also will have to pay $545,000 to five black Virginia Beach, Va., women in a separate discrimination lawsuit; White had sent them vulgar, threatening letters during their dispute with a local landlord. The women were awarded amounts ranging from $45,000 to $65,000. White's now-defunct American National Socialist Workers Party was found liable for another $280,000. (The Southern Poverty Law Center assisted the attorney for the women.)

It's unclear just how much White can pay (he once claimed to be worth more than $2 million), but the plaintiffs can seek to collect any assets he might acquire over the next 40 years. Also, the financial punishments against him will stand even if he should file for bankruptcy.

The ruling ends a lucrative run White enjoyed with his real estate empire in Virginia, where he bought property in largely black neighborhoods as part of what he called a "ghetto beautification project." What an ugly brand of beauty it was: White would boot out residents who could no longer afford to stay without using Section 8 government vouchers, which he refused to accept. He sent letters calling his residents "dirty parasites" and once wrote tenants that his "patience with you and the government that coddles you runs thin."

As if financial and judicial ruin were not enough, an ironic twist left White's family targeted by threats from the racist right last October. Apparently angered by things White had said in court, self-professed Aryan Brotherhood member Timothy Grant Bland, 45, allegedly began a terror campaign against White's wife and daughter, calling in the middle of the night to leave lewd and sometimes hostile messages.

“You’re a disgrace,” Bland said in one phone call to White’s wife, Meghan, according to the U.S. Attorney’s Office. “Aryan Brotherhood is coming for you.” Meghan White said Bland also texted her pictures of his genitals — pictures that were still on his cell phone when he was arrested.

EXTREMIST COP-KILLERS

Father and Son Bank Bombers Head To Death Row in Oregon

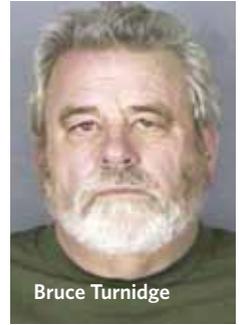

With faces swept free of emotion, Bruce Turnidge and his son, Joshua Turnidge, received death sentences in December for aggravated murder charges stemming from the bombing of an Oregon bank that killed two police officers.

During trial, a portrait of two angry men emerged: delusional and racist “Patriots” contemptuous of the government and police and fearful that President Obama would take away their right to possess guns. Both father and son harbored antigovernment ideas and fantasized about figures they viewed as antigovernment heroes, including Oklahoma City bomber Timothy McVeigh, who was executed in 2003. Nevertheless, it remains unclear exactly why the Turnidges thought planting a bomb outside a suburban bank before a robbery would strike a blow against federal power.

The Turnidge bombing occurred on Dec. 12, 2008, when an employee at Wells Fargo in Woodburn, Ore., received a call from a man instructing her and her fellow employees to leave the building. When her manager told her to hang up, she did so and promptly notified police. William Hakim, a bomb technician with the Oregon State Police, initially thought the boxed bomb was a hoax and began dismantling the package.

The bomb went off unexpectedly. Prosecutors contended that it was set off by an unknown transmission of some kind, perhaps from a local CB radio. Defense attorneys claimed that Hakim set it off by hammering on the device.

NOV. 13, 2010 • PHOENIX, ARIZ.

Throwing their support behind Arizona’s highly controversial anti-immigrant S.B. 1070 law, as many as 60 members of the National Socialist Movement (NSM) were subjected to a hail of stones and other missiles hurled by anti-racist protesters as they marched toward the Sandra Day O’Connor Federal Court Building. The NSM, which is the largest neo-Nazi group in the nation, targeted that building because it was there that a federal judge stayed major portions of the law, which would require immigrants to carry papers at all times and force police to demand those papers in many circumstances. About 100 anti-racists clashed violently with NSM members as they marched — at one point, a woman with the NSM was struck in the head by a projectile — and police in riot gear stepped in with tear gas and pepper spray to quell the melee. Two people were arrested for throwing rocks at officers. In a heroic retelling of the day’s events, the NSM sang the praises of its own “valiant members” and fulminated about the anti-racist “masked cowards” who attacked them. After the march, the NSM crowd retired to an unknown location where they burned a swastika and admired an altar of sorts, decorated with a Nazi flag and photos (from left) of late American Nazi Party founder George Lincoln Rockwell, current NSM “commander” Jeff Schoep, and, naturally, a grimly determined Adolf Hitler.

Nine members of the self-described group of “Christian warriors” were arrested last March and accused of plotting to murder a police officer and then use bombs and missiles to kill hundreds of other officers at the funeral in a bid to set off a national insurrection. The eight men and one woman came from Michigan, Indiana and Ohio.

NOV. 30 Allen Goff, an 18-year-old white supremacist accused of threatening an American Indian teen at gunpoint in Billings, Mont., pleaded not guilty to felony charges of assault with a weapon. Goff leads the Montana Creators Assembly, an offshoot of the neo-Nazi Creativity Movement. In 2009, Goff was charged with the racially motivated shooting of a Latino teen in the leg, but claimed it was an accident and was only convicted last July of weapons charges. He got six months’ probation.

DEC. 9 Actor Wesley Snipes began a three-year federal prison sentence in Pennsylvania for failing to file income tax returns on millions of dollars of earnings during the 1990s and later. The 48-year-old star of the “Blade” films and “Jungle Fever” had long maintained his innocence, telling CNN’s Larry King a day earlier that he wasn’t a tax protester, despite abundant evidence that he actively sought out and employed bogus tax-avoidance advice from radical-right “sovereign citizen” gurus.

DEC. 9 A federal court in Bridgeport, Conn., sentenced Edwin Westmoreland to 40 months in prison for providing weapons to an informant posing as a representative of the Imperial Klans of America. Westmoreland, a member of the Connecticut White Wolves neo-Nazi group, had pleaded guilty in June to selling guns to the informant, who he knew was a convicted felon. Prosecutors have said the plot, which allegedly involved several other White Wolves members, was part of a push to boost the group’s status and geographic base in the white supremacist movement.

DEC. 16 Following two mistrials, John Ditullio was convicted of murder and sentenced to life in prison for a 2006 knife attack that badly wounded Patricia Wells and killed her son’s 17-year-old friend, Kristofer King. Ditullio, who was a recruit in a racist skinhead group called American Nazis, lived in a trailer park with fellow members in New Port Richey, Fla., next to Wells’ home. Ditullio and his fellow neo-Nazis reportedly despised Wells because she sometimes had black house guests.

OCT. 22 Daniel Cowart, the one-time probationary member of the Supreme White Alliance racist skinhead group who pleaded guilty in March to charges he plotted to kill then-Democratic presidential candidate Barack Obama in 2008, was sentenced to 14 years in prison. In addition to Cowart of Bells, Tenn., Paul Schlesselman of West Helena, Ark., was convicted in a separate trial. The pair met over the Internet and hatched plans for a robbery and killing spree culminating in Obama’s assassination.

NOV. 8 Daniel Lee Jones, a regional director of the now-defunct American Nationalist Socialist Workers Party, was sentenced to 18 months in prison for mailing a hangman’s noose to F.M. Jason Upthegrove, former president of the Lima, Ohio, chapter of the NAACP. Upthegrove was targeted after he criticized a drug raid that left 26-year-old Tarika Wilson dead and her 14-month-old son wounded.

Hakim and Woodburn Police Capt. Thomas Tennant were killed in the explosion. Woodburn Police Chief Scott Russell lost his right leg, and bank employee Laurie Perkett was injured.

One of the witnesses to the bombing, an ATF agent, likened the Turnidge's bomb to those made by Eric Rudolph, the anti-abortion terrorist known as the "Olympic Park Bomber" who was responsible for a series of bombings between 1996 and 1998 that killed two people and injured more than 100.

In a jail cell letter to his girlfriend before the death sentence was handed down, Joshua Turnidge vowed he would fight to the death against those who had "declared war" on him, and that his last breath would come in battle. "I fear my heart is growing cold with hate for what they have done to us," he wrote. "I pledge to you that not a day will go by that will not be filled with retribution."

ANTIGOVERNMENT 'PATRIOTS'

Texas Secessionist Charged With Shooting Oilman, Police Officers

Victor Dewayne White was just another reclusive extremist with ties to white supremacist groups and the Republic of Texas (ROT), which claims Texas is a sovereign nation never legally annexed by the United States. Then, in September, police say he decided to wage a one-man war against local authorities in a violent standoff that left three people wounded in West Odessa.

The standoff began after an employee of an oil company went to White's property with Ector County Sheriff's Deputy Ricky Tijerina and Sgt. Steve McNeil to access an oil well to which the company owned rights. White allegedly began firing almost immediately, wounding all three men as they retreated.

Victor Dewayne White

Before moving to a fortified position, White climbed into a sheriff's vehicle and taunted officers. "He got on the radio and basically was spouting off things about the deputies and law enforcement, making political and religious statements and making comments urging the snipers to make him a martyr," Texas Department of Public Safety spokesman John Barton told the Odessa American.

In the 22-hour siege that followed, police say White sporadically opened fire on law enforcement helicopters and officers from a large dirt mound that contained trenches, bunkers and firing positions. The dirt barricade, which had a white cross and a flagpole on top, was built near the trailer where White lived without utilities on several desolate acres.

White finally surrendered as SWAT team members in an armored vehicle closed in on him. He was indicted in December on three charges of attempted capital murder and was being held on a $2 million bail.

This wasn't the first confrontation between law enforcement and individuals associated with the ROT. In 1997, Richard McLaren, who was then head of the ROT, initiated a six-day standoff with hundreds of Texas Rangers after his followers kidnapped a neighbor couple at gunpoint and demanded the release of a jailed movement member. One ROT member was killed in the gunfight that followed, and McLaren was eventually sentenced to 111 years in prison for his role.

In addition, John Joe Gray, a reported former ROT member, has been holed up on his remote property near Trinidad, Texas, for the past decade — ever since posting bail on charges that he attacked a police officer during a traffic stop. He later sent a letter to authorities telling them to bring along body bags if they came after him.

A final goodbye: An honor guard was part of a funeral service held in Ecuador for José Sucuzhañay after he was murdered by nationalists in Brooklyn in 2008. Together with the murder of another Ecuadorian immigrant in nearby Long Island the same year, the killing drew national attention to anti-Latino hate violence.

ANTI-IMMIGRANT HATE CRIME

Murder of Ecuadorian Man Dismissed With A Shrug

Keith Phoenix — who confessed to the 2008 murder of an Ecuadorian immigrant in Brooklyn by saying, "So I killed someone — that makes me a bad guy?" — has been sentenced to more than 30 years in prison. The case drew national outrage after the man's death was captured on camera.

According to investigators, Phoenix and another man, Hakim Scott, jumped out of their sport utility vehicle and began yelling racist slurs before pouncing on José Sucuzhañay and his brother because they were Latino and, the attackers thought, gay. A camera on a nearby tollbooth caught Phoenix laughing maniacally as he sped away, leaving Sucuzhañay mortally wounded in the gutter.

Phoenix and Scott each received 37-year sentences in August, though

Scott was cleared of the more serious hate crime charges.

That murder was among the more serious recent acts of violence against Latinos across the country. It came amid a volatile anti-immigrant climate — vigilantes actively patrolling the borders with Mexico, fear-mongering filling the airwaves, and states attempting to adopt sweeping changes to immigration policy that are likely to lead to illegal racial profiling.

Just days before Phoenix and Scott were sentenced, 18-year-old Christian Vasquez was beaten repeatedly in the Staten Island, N.Y., neighborhood of Port Richmond until his left eye swelled shut. According to police, his attackers took $10 while yelling anti-Mexican slurs and “Go home.”

The case drew national attention after Staten Island Borough President James Molinaro told the Staten Island Advance, “These are not bias incidents ... these are criminal acts.” He later said the victim “could have been anybody.”

In Arizona, Jason Bush and his co-defendant, a former teen prostitute named Shawna Forde who started and led a vigilante group called Minuteman American Defense (MAD), went to trial in January for killing a Latino father and daughter. Albert Gaxiola was also being charged as a co-conspirator in the murders. Bush and Forde will face a possible death sentence if convicted. The three are accused of attacking the family — the mother of the family was wounded but survived — in a bid to steal money to fund Forde’s group.

Meanwhile, state leaders in Utah are under attack after drawing up a five-point plan to address immigration reform. The so-called Utah Compact is a declaration of principles meant to guide the state’s discussion of immigration reforms.

The Utah Minuteman Project opposes those reforms, calling the compact part of a conspiracy between the Chamber of Commerce, churches and corporations to “put the derrieres of illegal aliens in the pews,” project chairman Eli Cawley told KSL Newsradio in Salt Lake City.

HATE CRIMES

Mentally Disabled Navajo Man Branded With Swastika

In the first known case filed under the federal hate crimes law signed by President Obama in 2009, three New Mexico men face charges after being accused of using a heated wire coat hanger to brand a swastika on a mentally disabled Navajo man.

Paul Beebe, William Hatch and Jesse Sanford each face one count of conspiracy and one count of violating the federal hate crimes law, also known as the Matthew Shepard and James Byrd Jr. Hate Crimes Prevention Act. They also face state felony charges of kidnapping, conspiracy to commit kidnapping, aggravated battery causing great bodily harm and conspiracy to commit aggravated battery.

They are accused of more than just branding Vincent Kee’s arm in April 2009. Police say they shaved a swastika on the back of his head, drew two horns on his forehead and wrote the words “White Power” across the back of his neck. None of this seems incidental. The men are believed to be associated with the white supremacist movement, and a search of Beebe’s apartment turned up various items displaying Nazi iconography, including a Nazi flag mounted on a wall and a baseball bat painted with a swastika.

In his defense, Sanford’s attorney claims Kee was a willing participant and that cell phone video footage shows Kee agreeing to the brand. It was meant, the men say, as a Navajo tribal symbol representing rolling water. Throughout history, the swastika has had many meanings, including its associations with many southwestern Native American Indian tribes — but its use by the Nazis is surely the most frightening and lasting associations.

The defense so far hinges on Kee, who suffers from fetal alcohol syndrome, a condition that diminished his mental capacity. Attorneys for at least two of the men say that alone is reason to doubt Kee’s claim that the branding and markings were done against his will. Defense attorney Eric Morrow wrote that police and other adults convinced Kee that the branding was a criminal act. “At this point, his words are not his own,” Morrow wrote in court filings. ▲

Behind the Academies

Half a century after school desegregation began, a racist hate group is still helping fund two private Mississippi schools

BY HEIDI BEIRICH

Old times certainly are not forgotten in some parts of the South. Two private Mississippi academies, set up in 1968 for white children facing the unacceptable (to their parents) prospect of sharing their classrooms with African Americans, are still being enthusiastically funded by white supremacists.

Calhoun Academy in Calhoun City and Carroll Academy in Carrollton have been the beneficiaries of considerable financial support over the past two decades from the Council of Conservative Citizens (CCC), a crudely white supremacist group whose website has referred to blacks as “a retrograde species of humanity” and whose newspaper, Citizens Informer, regularly publishes articles condemning “race mixing” and lamenting the decline of white, European civilization.

The CCC is the direct descendant of the segregationist White Citizens Councils of the 1950s and 1960s, having been largely built on the earlier councils’ mailing lists. The Supreme Court’s landmark 1954 decision, Brown v. Board of Education, ordering desegregation of the nation’s public schools, sparked the growth of the White Citizens Councils, which declared, “We will not be integrated. We are proud of our white blood and our white heritage of sixty centuries.” The councils’ first order of business after the court decision was to create private, all-white schools that came to be known as segregation, or seg, academies. By 1975, at least a half million white students had withdrawn from public schools to avoid mandatory desegregation.

Though the academies remain across the South, their days of overtly catering solely to whites have ended. But a minority presence at some schools can be hard to find: The headmaster of Carroll Academy, Steve Flemming, told the Intelligence Report that the school has one non-white student. Calhoun’s headmaster, Coach Cameron White, said that his school had four non-white students, some of whom “may have black blood in their families.”

The Carroll and Calhoun academies, which both were founded in 1968 and offer classes from kindergarten through high school, are revered by the CCC. The CCC’s longtime national field coordinator, Bill Lord, who was president of Carroll Academy for 14 years in the 1980s and 1990s, called them “the miracle of the century.” In 2004, Lord wrote in the Citizens Informer that the academies create “an atmosphere free of social experiments” for those who want to “associate with persons of like persuasion,” presumably meaning other whites. According to his biographical profile, Lord helped organize both Carroll and Calhoun academies, as well as six others in Arkansas and Tennessee.

The CCC works hard to support the schools, holding barbecue fundraisers that bring in substantial donations. In 1999, for instance, the CCC reported that it had raised over $100,000 for Calhoun Academy. The group also prominently features activities taking place at the academies in its publications. The CCC’s April-June 2010 Citizens Informer, for example, ran a photo of the Carroll Academy Lady Rebels basketball team along with congratulations for having won a championship.

In February 2010, Carroll Academy hosted a CCC meeting that featured Jeppi Barbour, brother of Mississippi Gov. Haley Barbour, describing a petition drive for a ballot proposal that would require voters to show ID before voting. Photos show Jeppi Barbour in the academy’s library speaking to dozens of CCC members. And the local CCC chapter regularly meets in the school’s facilities. In March 2009, the chapter’s meeting at the academy featured an unnamed guest student “have never had a concern” about white supremacists meeting at and helping to fund his academy.

For his part, White, the headmaster at Calhoun Academy, told the Report that the CCC donates only “about $4 a year” to the school, which contradicts the CCC’s published accounts of its fundraisers for the school. When asked about the barbecue the group held earlier this year to raise funds for the school, White said his campus receives “no direct donations” and added that he didn’t know if the CCC had “assisted in cooking” to benefit the school. When asked about the CCC’s views — one of its platform statements is a promise to “oppose all efforts to mix the races of mankind” — White said, “I wouldn’t comment on that.”

Both academies are accredited members of the Mississippi Association of Independent Schools (MAIS), which includes dozens of private academies in Mississippi, Louisiana and Arkansas. A search of the association’s accreditation materials could find no reference to best practices or policies dealing with racism or discrimination. But in a November E-mail to the Report, MAIS Executive Director David Derrick said: “Policies of the Mississippi Association of Independent Schools (MAIS) provide that member schools shall not discriminate in enrollment on the basis of race. Member schools, however, are autonomous in their decisions regarding funding. There are no policies in place that allow for, or require, review of funding sources of member schools.”

After the CCC’s support for these schools was initially disclosed in October on the Hatewatch blog, a sister Southern Poverty Law Center publication to the Intelligence Report, an anti-racist group called Change.org organized two petition campaigns to stop racist funding of the academies. By January MAIS had changed its tone, demanding that the schools end their financial relationship with the CCC. ▲ recent barbecue fundraiser the CCC held for the school are on the academy’s website, including two that depict a big CCC banner alongside a Confederate flag.

Calhoun Academy also gets considerable ink in the CCC’s newsletter. A picture in April-June Citizens Informer shows a massive barbecue pit full of chicken that was sold to help the school. “Tasty B-B-Q benefits Calhoun Academy,” reads the caption. On another page the newsletter notes that the barbecue event brought in over $1,600 for Calhoun, described as a “private school organized by the Council.” A 2004 description of another barbecue fundraiser put on by the local CCC chapter said the funds from “the program are used to purchase textbooks and visual aids for the school library.” These events have been held for nearly two decades for both schools.

Given the CCC’s long relationship with Carroll Academy, it was surprising how unaware headmaster Flemming said he was about the group. He told the Report that CCC members have children in his academy and that the group is “supportive of the school.” But he said that he was “not informed” about the nature of the CCC, even though the group regularly meets on his campus. He declined to condemn their racist views, saying that he didn’t want “offend anyone” and that “they have their right to feel how they feel.” Flemming also told the Report that the parents of his school’s one non-white speaker who is “one of the top judges in Mississippi, who gave a talk on the need for conservative organizations across the state to offset the liberals that are trying to influence the courts.” (In recent years, the CCC has avoided naming public figures who address the group because of the ramifications of speaking to an openly racist group. Most politicians have strenuously avoided the CCC since the late 1990s.)

In line with the CCC’s reverence for all symbols of the Old South, Carroll Academy’s sports teams are called the Rebels and the school’s mascot — featured prominently on its website — is Colonel Reb. (The colonel is identical to the mascot of the University of Mississippi that was axed seven years ago because of its connection to the Confederacy and its racist doctrines.) Several photos of a

Taking Aim

A law student targets SPLC in an assassination fantasy.
Kyle Bristow also conjures up an imaginary past for white people

BY ALEXANDER ZAITCHIK

It was no surprise last October when former hate group leader Kyle Bristow self-published a white nationalist novel featuring the graphic assassination of a character based on a prominent employee of the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC). Bristow, after all, has had an outsized ax to grind with the SPLC since his undergraduate years at Michigan State University. It was there that he first attained notoriety for inviting hate group spokesmen to speak on campus and for promoting a video game centered on killing Mexican migrants.

Somewhat more surprising than the book itself are the dozen gushing blurbs Bristow collected in praise of his violently racist debut novel, White Apocalypse. Some of these blurbs are from usual suspects like Billy Roper, of White Revolution and the Nationalist Party of America, and James Edwards, of the hate radio program “The Political Cesspool.” But the book also received glowing praise from two academics with ties to well-known universities.

The first is Kevin MacDonald, professor of psychology at California State University at Long Beach. McDonald calls White Apocalypse “an emotionally compelling account of Whites as historical victims of non-Whites — just the sort of thing we need to motivate a renaissance among our people.”

Despite his high-sounding position, MacDonald is a raging anti-Semite who contends that Jews are driven by a genetically programmed evolutionary strategy to undermine Western civilization.

MacDonald, whose writings on Jews have been condemned by his academic colleagues, recently joined an explicitly white supremacist group, the American Third Position, which was started by a man who has called for the deportation of all Americans with any “ascertainable trace of Negro blood.”

Another fan of Bristow’s novel is self-described white “separatist” Virginia Abernethy, a professor emerita at Vanderbilt University medical school. Abernethy calls White Apocalypse a “well-researched page-turner” and hopes it is the first of many. “One looks forward to much more from this author,” she writes.

Craig Bodeker, producer of the film “A Conversation About Race,” also weighs in with a prominent endorsement. Bodeker, who persists in claiming he is no racist despite posting Internet comments describing black people as “EVIL monkeys,” calls Bristow’s book “the jolt Whites need to awaken from our suicidal slumber!”

Let’s hope no one takes Bristow’s book seriously, let alone finds themselves being “awakened” by it. Its plot is driven by puerile prose and revolves around a series of violent revenge fantasies against Jewish professors, Latino and Native American activists, and the SPLC.

Targeting Enemies

Much of White Apocalypse is spent dramatizing one man’s crusade against the “evil, anti-Western” activities of an Atlanta-based organization called the “Center for Diversity and Multiculturalism.” The organization, with its “hate group list” and large legal staff, is clearly modeled on the Montgomery, Ala.-based SPLC. The book also includes characters whose roles match that of two SPLC senior staffers: Mark Potok, the director of SPLC’s Intelligence Project and editor of this magazine, and Heidi Beirich, the SPLC’s director of research.

On page 195, the Potok character — the Center’s spokesman, named David Greenberg, who Bristow describes as an “oily, curly haired troll” — has just finished delivering testimony in a federal courthouse. As Greenberg stands outside the building, the novel's hero, a one-man militia named Jack Schoenherr (which translates roughly from the German as "Mr. Handsome") fires a bullet from his AR-15 from the roof of a nearby parking garage. Bristow describes the event as follows:

"The supersonic projectile hit the leftist agitator one inch below the eye, and the bullet exited the back of his head nanoseconds later. ... Brain, blood, and skull fragments burst forth from what was once Greenberg's head, and the leftist was blown off both of his feet. Greenberg died instantly, and his last words were 'We must destroy the plague that is Western culture.' Ironically, Western culture got him first. From Valhalla [a celebration hall in Scandinavian mythology], Thor, the archenemy of trolls, smiled at the accomplishment of the epitome of Western Man."

When asked to comment on what is obviously a murder fantasy concerning the SPLC's Potok, Bristow replied via E-mail to this reporter that any parallels were purely coincidental.

"Dear Guttersnipe," read Bristow's response, "I do not 'fantasize' about anyone's death. I do, however, fantasize quite often of taking the country over and implementing a real right-wing agenda that would make [archconservative MSNBC commentator] Pat Buchanan and the late Sam Francis [the chief editor of the white supremacist Council of Conservative Citizens] proud. What I mean by this is the most offensive thing possible, and what this is I will leave to your imagination."

Precious little imagination is required.

With its anti-Semitism and racist venom, White Apocalypse is the latest entry into a long tradition of American hate-fiction animated by the hatreds, fantasies, and frustrations that fester in far-right circles. The most famous of the genre in recent times is, of course, the late neo-Nazi William Pierce's The Turner Diaries, a race-war novel that inspired the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing and the murderous acts of the domestic terrorist group, the Order, in the mid-1980s.

Bristow's book makes clear that his current heroes include not just marginal far-right figures, but also conservative commentators employed by major cable news and radio networks. Early in the novel, Bristow quotes "Dr. Michael Savage" approvingly, an obvious reference to hate-radio jock Michael Savage. The book's militia tough-guy hero offers a reading list that includes Pat Buchanan's The Suicide of the West. Nor does it take long to figure out that the name of his protagonist, Samuel Buchanan, is meant as homage to Pat Buchanan and Buchanan's late friend, one-time Washington Times columnist Samuel Francis.

Bristow, now a law student at the University of Toledo, forged most of his connections to the radical right as the 21-year-old campus director of the Michigan State University chapter of Young Americans for Freedom (YAF). He gained notoriety (as well as the SPLC's hate group designation) for inviting well-known extremists to speak on campus, such as the leader of the whites-only British National Party, Holocaust denier Nick Griffin, and for stunts like advocating a video game in which players earned points by shooting Mexican migrants at the border.

While representing YAF, Bristow earned notice from bookers and hosts at Fox News Channel. As Bristow still proudly boasts on his website, he once appeared on The O'Reilly Factor and has been quoted on-air by Sean Hannity.

Bristow's national television appearances occurred back when he was a lowly student activist. Today, he is a self-published author on a crusade not merely to entertain or inspire to violence his fellow white nationalists, but to reveal the true story of their Stone Age ancestors, who, he firmly believes, settled North America some 20,000 years ago.

Stone Age Aryans

To the extent that Bristow's violent novel can be said to service an idea, that idea is a newly resurgent fad on the far-right known as the "Solutrean Hypothesis." The hero of White Apocalypse is on a mission to give the hypothesis its proper hearing. SPLC villains are the main obstacles standing in his way.

The crux of Bristow's "repressed knowledge" is the belief that Stone Age European explorers first settled the North American continent millennia before the Asian settlers known to history as Native Americans.

The origin of the idea lies in the 1933 discovery of an arrow- and spearhead known as a "Clovis point." Its design led archeologists to coin the term "Clovis culture" to refer to what they believed was distinctive about a wave of settlers who crossed the Bering Straight from Eastern Siberia during the last ice age, around 14,000 BCE.

Soon after the Clovis discovery, an archaeologist named Frank Hibben began writing about the similarities between the Clovis points found in North America and those designed by a Stone Age Southwestern European civilization known as the Solutrean. While overwhelmingly dismissed by his peers, Hibben's hypothesis struck a resonant chord with Americans who liked the idea that the discovery and settlement of the Western Hemisphere was a prehistoric triumph of European, not Asian, will and technology.

Over the next 60 years, the Solutrean Hypothesis of a European-American "lost race" gained a handful of adherents, but it was generally considered crank science and dismissed. The hypothesis gained new life and professional traction only in the late 1990s. It was then that two archeologists associated with the Smithsonian Institution, Dennis Stanford and Bruce Bradley, claimed to be in a position to finally build on Hibben's original theory.

The major event in this renaissance occurred in 1996, when archeologists discovered a skeleton in Washington State that was described as having "Caucasoid" features. Although a report by the National Park Service Archaeology and Ethnology Program later declared that the remains were Native American and only 9,000 years old, white nationalist advocates of the Solutrean Hypothesis seized on the initial reports to revive the idea that Europeans were the first to settle the Western Hemisphere. They were further encouraged a few years later, when Stanford and Bradley announced what they claimed was further evidence of prehistoric Solutrean settlement. This evidence was largely based on a negative discovery: They reported finding no trace of Clovis technology in the Asian areas that the Native Americans supposedly came from. This argument was matched with a complex and contested history of the lineage of a mitochondrial DNA called haplogroup X found in some mummified North American remains.

"Brain, blood, and skull fragments burst forth from what was once Greenberg's head."

— KYLE BRISTOW, ENTHUSIASTICALLY DESCRIBING THE MURDER OF A CIVIL RIGHTS ACTIVIST

As it had been in the 1930s, the archeology profession was once again largely dismissive of the new and improved Solutrean Hypothesis. The anthropologist Lawrence Guy Straus summed up the still-reigning consensus view that the Clovis civilization was native, and not dependent on contact with Solutreans, in a 2000 interview with National Geographic. "One of the great failings of archaeology," he told the magazine, "is a continuous falling back on the notion that if a couple of things [like Clovis arrowheads] resemble one another, they have to have the same source. But these similarities appear and reappear time and again in different places."

The 'Real' Native Americans

Despite any real proof that Solutreans settled North America, the hypothesis over the last decade has continued to gain white nationalist adherents who have seized on it to stage a prehistoric white persecution drama. If Europeans settled North America first, then the Asians that followed them — now known as Native Americans — not only have no claim on the land, but also must have committed genocide against the original white settlers, who did not survive to tell their story. This is the meaning of the title of Bristow's novel, White Apocalypse, which he dedicates to "the real Native Americans"—i.e., the descendents of Stone Age Europeans. The title for Bristow's promotional site for the book, meanwhile, is named The Solutrean Liberation Front, after the fictional group created by the novel's assassin-hero, Jack Schoenherr.

Unfortunately for Bristow and his fellow white nationalist Solutrean proponents, the hypothesis as understood even by sympathetic archeologists does not exactly jibe with their reading.

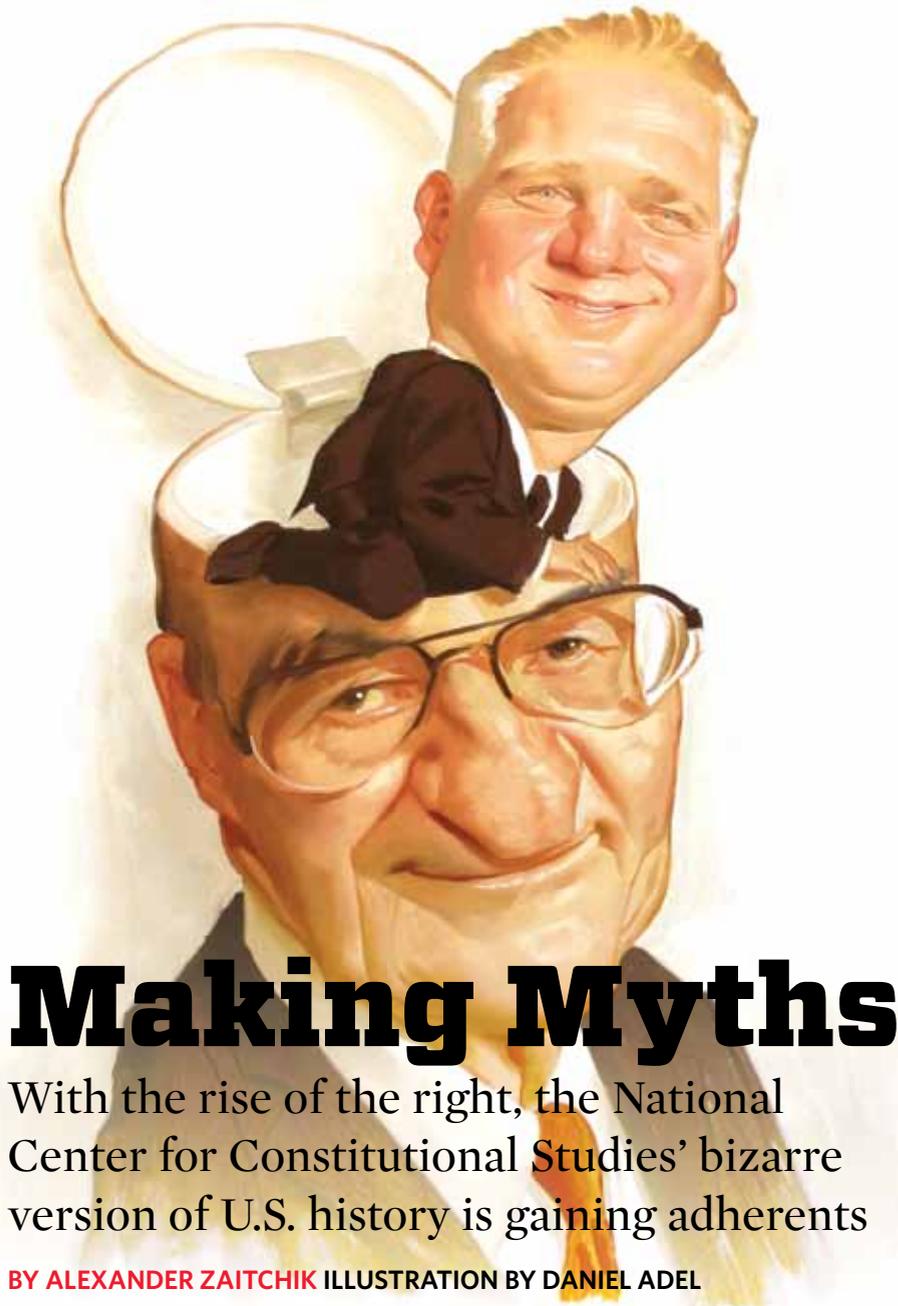

Shortly after Bristow released his book, the watchdog group YAF Watch contacted Dennis Stanford, the most prominent proponent of the Solutrean Hypothesis and head of the National Museum of Natural History's Archaeology Division. His take on the crude appropriation of his ideas by white nationalists was not sympathetic.

"There are several major problems" with using the Solutrean Hypothesis to advance a white nationalist racial politics, said Stanford. The biggest, he explained, is that "even if the Solutrean hypothesis is demonstrated, there is no evidence that these people were the same race as modern Europeans; in fact, they most likely were not the same race. Their origin in Europe is a major research question. At the present, most scholars believe the people who made the European Solutrean artifacts came out of North Africa [around] 25,000 years ago."

The other leading proponent of the Solutrean Hypothesis, Bruce Bradley, is no better disposed to the efforts that Bristow and others are making to use it as intellectual fuel for the white power movement.

"It is quite likely that [if] these events happened, [it was] before 'racial' diversification occurred," Bradley, now an associate professor of experimental archeology at the University of Exeter in England, told the Intelligence Report. "Any facile explanations about the possible implications in relation to modern history will certainly be discredited."

Bristow has shown to the world he's not much of a writer. It turns out he's an even worse armchair archeologist. ▲

Making Myths

With the rise of the right, the National Center for Constitutional Studies' bizarre version of U.S. history is gaining adherents

BY ALEXANDER ZAITCHIK ILLUSTRATION BY DANIEL ADEL

FAIRMONT, W. Va. — One fine Saturday morning last year, around 60 mostly middle-aged conservatives trickled onto the otherwise deserted campus of Fairmont State University. Clutching notebooks and coffee cups, they looked like groggy Continuing Ed students as they took seats in a modern lecture hall on the ground floor of the school's engineering building. In a sense, they were Continuing Ed students. The room had been booked months in advance for a one-day, intro-level history and civics seminar entitled, "The Making of America."

But this was no ordinary summer school. Randall McNeely, the seminar's kindly, awkward, and heavy-set instructor, held no advanced degree and made no claims to being a scholar of any kind. He was, rather, a product of rote training in a religious and apocalyptic interpretation of American history that has roots in the racist right of the last century. His students for the day had learned about the class not in the Fairmont State summer catalog, but from the website of the obscure nonprofit run by fringe Mormons. Founded as the Freeman Institute in Provo, Utah, in 1971, the outfit now goes by the name National Center for Constitutional Studies (NCCS), and works out of a remote farmhouse in Malta, Idaho (population 177).

This humble base of operations, however, constrains neither the outfit's national ambitions nor its missionary zeal. The NCCS has been touring the country and propagating its ultraconservative Mormon message for nearly four decades. Yet its message has never been in greater demand than in 2010. Since the rise of the Tea Party circuit, the all-volunteer NCCS has experienced exploding interest from Tea Party-affiliated groups such as the 9.12 Project and the Tea Party Patriots. On any given Saturday, several of nearly 20 "Making of America" lecturers are giving seminars across the country in spaces like the rented classroom in Fairmont, with $10 tickets and NCCS book sales paying for their travel and expenses.

Along with a busier schedule, the NCCS also has a growing list of allies. In the media, it has found a powerful voice in the form of Fox News' Glenn Beck, who is a Mormon himself and has used his pulpit to advocate for NCCS books and ideas. Through Beck's sustained and energetic advocacy, once-forgotten NCCS tracts of Mormon-flavored pseudo-history such as The 5,000 Year Leap have become unlikely online best-sellers. As a result, traveling volunteer NCCS lecturers like McNeely today have no shortage of students eager to learn his version of "truth."

"In our time together, we're going to learn the truth about American history and what our government is supposed to do—and not do," said McNeely, after opening the August seminar in Fairmont with a Christian prayer and a patriotic song of his own authorship. "We're going to learn sound principles. Once we have possession of these sound principles, we can solve nearly every problem in America, the way the Founders would have liked."

As the morning progressed, it became clear that the NCCS worldview and program were based on three major pillars: understanding the divine guidance that has allowed the United States to thrive; rejecting the tyrannical, implicitly sinful, nature of the modern federal government; and preparing for a divine reckoning that will bring down America's government and possibly tear society as we know it asunder, thus allowing those with sound principles — i.e., godly NCCS graduates — to rebuild the republic along “sounder,” more pious lines.

America’s return to extremely limited government, as they think God intended, is destined to happen, NCCS lecturers teach, because God has already shown an interventionist role in American history. According to the NCCS, the founding of the United States was nothing short of a “miracle” in the literal sense of the word. God is watching, in other words, and he is not happy. Teaching out of the seminar’s 131-page illustrated workbook, McNeely argued that the current federal government is guilty of a “usurpation of power.” It is, therefore, illegitimate, though McNeely never actually uttered that word. Governmental powers should be used sparingly, he explained, limited largely to the common defense and the elimination of “debauchery and vice.”

In some ways, the NCCS worldview can sound remarkably similar to that of antigovernment “Patriots,” whose movement has exploded in the last two years. So it’s not much of a surprise that it has found a number of new organizational allies among “Constitutionalist” groups such as the conspiracy-obsessed John Birch Society, the ultraconservative “pro-family” group Eagle Forum, and the Oath

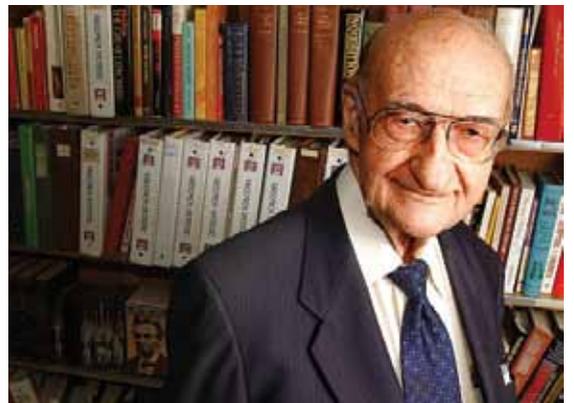

Keepers, a group of ex-police and military personnel who publicly promise to resist orders if they find those orders at odds with their understanding of the Constitution. At the 2010 National Liberty Unity Summit, a powwow of far-right groups, NCCS president Earl Taylor delivered the keynote address following speeches by leading Oath Keepers Richard Mack and Guy Cunningham.

But mostly, the NCCS focuses on its seminars. And business has never been better.

Communists, Capitalists and Jews

Students of the American far right may not recognize the anodyne-sounding NCCS, but they no doubt know the name of its founder, the late W. Cleon Skousen. By the time Skousen founded The Freeman Institute in 1971 (the name was changed to NCCS in 1984), the bespectacled former police chief had become a minor legend in the annals of right-wing radicalism. Throughout the late 1950s and 60s, following 11 years of mostly administrative work in the FBI, Skousen toured the country whipping up anti-communist (and anti-civil rights) hysteria under the banner of the John Birch Society. Among the stories in Skousen’s fantastical arsenal was the claim that New Dealer Harry Hopkins gave the Soviets “50 suitcases” worth of information on the Manhattan Project and nearly half of the nation’s supply of enriched uranium. When the John Birch Society came under attack for its founder’s claim that Dwight Eisenhower was a communist agent, Skousen wrote a pamphlet titled The Communist Attack on the John Birch Society.

In the 1970s, he penned an influential tract of New World Order conspiracism, The Naked Capitalist, which described a cabal of scheming, internationalist-minded bankers and government officials set on destroying the Constitution by manipulating left and liberal groups around the world. The purpose of liberal internationalist groups such as the Council on Foreign Relations, Skousen believed, is to push “U.S. foreign policy toward the establishment of a worldwide collectivist society.”

Among the sources Skousen cited to substantiate this claim was a former czarist army officer named Arsene de Goulevitch, whose own sources included Boris Brasol, a White Russian émigré who provided Henry Ford with the first English translation of the Jew-bashing classic, Protocols of the Elders of Zion, and later became a supporter of Nazi Germany.

The controversy that surrounded Skousen’s growing public profile in the 1960s and early 70s caused a debate within the Mormon Church leadership. For many church leaders, Skousen was

Benson quote: “The Greatest Watchdog of our Freedom is an informed electorate.” But Benson had a decidedly illiberal understanding of just what an informed electorate should believe. Benson read America’s history (and future) through a looking glass of apocalyptic Mormon theology and folklore. He believed that the Constitution would one day “hang from a thread,” at which time Mormons would assume leadership of the nation and rescue it from certain and irrevocable disaster. (These ideas are not part of official Mormon Church doctrine.)

Benson was also an advocate for Bircher-style conspiracy theories. Throughout the 1960s and 1970s, he saw the hand of communism in every social welfare policy and fought them as both immoral and unconstitutional.

purpose of the Freeman Institute, said its literature, was to “inspire Americans to return to the Founders’ original success formula.”

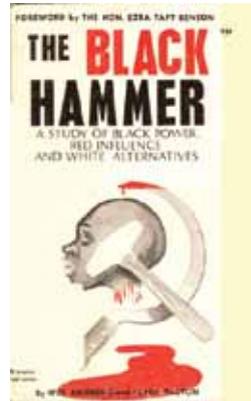

‘Christ or Chaos’

Skousen’s new institute, then as now, was not greeted by universal acclaim among his fellow Mormons. Edwin Brown Firmage, a professor of law at the University of Utah, complained to the Mormon magazine Sunstone in 1981: “Skousen is teaching right-wing fundamentalism with a constitutional veneer. How anyone can prove that civil rights and welfare are unconstitutional is beyond me. For his people, ‘Constitutional’ is just a right-wing buzzword.” A reporter from the Philadelphia Inquirer, Larry Eichel, reached the same conclusion after attending one of Skousen’s lectures in the birthplace of the Constitution. “He preached a political return to the eighteenth century,” wrote a dismayed Eichel.

The reporter was off by a century, but his point was well taken. What the Mormon constitutionalism pioneered by Skousen pines after most is the federal government of the mid-nineteenth century. If the NCCS could stop the clock anywhere, it would be 1867, the year before the passage of the Fourteenth Amendment. Like today’s Tenth movement, whose adherents cite the Tenth Amendment to advocate the sovereignty of the states over federal government power, Skousen argued that constitutional decline began when the federal government overrode the states to grant and enforce equality under the law.

Skousen first laid out his views on the Constitution in 1981, with the publication of The 5,000 Year Leap. Now the central text of Glenn Beck’s 9.12 Project — the Fox host calls the book “divinely inspired” — Leap is an illustrated recipe for turning the United States into 50 little theocracies, each dictating morality according to its own religious ethics. These ethics, argues Skousen in Leap, should be transmitted through “extensive Bible reading” in public schools.

The project of the book is clear, even if its author never came right out and said

Mormon leader Ezra Taft Benson, a close ally of W. Cleon Skousen, had powerful acquaintances who included President Dwight D. Eisenhower. Benson rabidly opposed the civil rights movement and once allowed an essay of his to be printed as an introduction to a particularly vicious and racist book.

bringing unwanted attention to the institution, which until then had generally eschewed involvement in politics. But Skousen also had allies in high places. The strongest and most loyal of them was Ezra Taft Benson, a Mormon Apostle and future church president.

As with Skousen, Benson remains an icon among many ultraconservative Mormons, and his name is routinely invoked during NCCS lectures. The flyer for the NCCS seminar in Fairmont prominently displayed, as do so many materials produced by the NCCS, a

A rabid foe of the civil rights movement, Benson in 1971 allowed one of his anti-civil rights talks to be reprinted as the introduction to a book of race hate called Black Hammer: A Study of Black Power, Red Influence, and White Alternatives. The book’s cover featured the severed, bloody head of an African American. By the end of the decade, his politics had taken a similar turn to that of his friend Skousen. During a 1972 general conference of the Church of Latter-day Saints, Benson recommended all Mormons read Gary Allen’s New World Order tract None Dare Call it A Conspiracy.

Such was the state of Skousen and Benson’s politics (and intellectual seriousness) when they celebrated the opening of the Freeman Institute on July 4, 1971, in a converted storefront judo studio just off the Brigham Young University campus in Provo, Utah. The

it. Others would prove bolder in explaining the importance of Leap. In Ronald Mann's introduction to Leap's 10th-anniversary edition, he praises Skousen for grasping America's choice of "Christ or chaos" and for acknowledging that its future depends on "accepting and demonstrating God's government."

The project started by Leap was furthered a few years later with the publication of The Miracle of America. After reducing its contents to a smaller workbook suitable for one- and seven-day seminars, Skousen again hit the road. During the first "Making of America" tour, he demonized the federal regulatory agencies, arguing for the abolition of everything from the Occupational Safety and Health Administration to the Environmental Protection Agency. He wanted to repeal the minimum wage, smash unions, nullify anti-discrimination laws, sell off public lands and national parks, end the direct election of senators, kill the income tax and the estate tax, knock down state-level walls separating church and state, and, of course, raze the Federal Reserve System.

Skousen's rolling theocratic lecture tour ran into problems in 1987, when outsiders started examining the contents of the book on which the seminars were based. The Making of America, it turned out, presented a history of slavery that could have been written by a propagandist for the Ku Klux Klan. Skousen relied for his interpretation of slavery on historian Fred Albert Shannon's Economic History of the People of the United States (1934). Quoting Shannon, Skousen described African-American children as "pickaninnies" and described American slave owners as the "worst victims" of the slavery system. He further explained that "[slave] gangs in transit were usually a cheerful lot, though the presence of a number of the more vicious type sometimes made it necessary for them all to go in chains." Shannon and Skousen also cast a skeptical eye on accounts of cruelty by slave masters and expressed much more interest in the "fear" Southern whites had while trying to protect "white civilization" from slave revolts.

Newer editions of The Making of America lack the glaring racism of Skousen's original version. But the current NCCS president, Earl Taylor, is not unknown to echo some of Skousen's controversial views. At a Mesa, Ariz., seminar earlier this year, a Washington Post reporter heard Taylor argue that Thomas Jefferson hesitated to free his own slaves because of his "benevolence." As Taylor often does, he defended this interpretation by referencing his participation in a walking tour. "If you've been to Monticello and you see how Jefferson cared for them, they didn't want to leave," the Post writer quotes Taylor as saying.

Glenn Beck and the Apocalypse

Defenders of the NCCS argue that the outfit, run by the grandfatherly Taylor, is merely teaching good old-fashioned civics to interested Americans. But while there is a large amount of straight, accurate history included in "Making of America" seminars, the lessons are about much more than just the Constitution. The organization's larger mission is to crudely propagandize against America's secular foundations and sow doubt over the legitimacy of the modern welfare and regulatory state, using a textbook written by a notorious conspiracist who adhered to apocalyptic folklore. And like Skousen, current NCCS lecturers believe that time is quickly running out.

There is a dark, often unspoken, subtext to the NCCS's crusade to promote the "sound principles" of proper Constitutional government. That subtext is a belief in the imminent collapse of civilization. This collapse is interwoven in the bombastic teachings of NCCS friend and ally Glenn Beck, whose Doomsday-drenched shows are profitably promoted by fear-mongering purveyors of everything from gold bullion to "crisis gardens" and emergency radios. The NCCS has done much to encourage and spread a deeply apocalyptic worldview among far-right Mormons, of whom Beck is only the most famous.

The NCCS views its education crusade as crucial for rebuilding America after a coming cataclysm; thus, "The Making of America" is best seen as a God-centric civics class for the bomb shelter. Speaking last year in Mesa, Ariz., Taylor spoke cryptically of the need for "the Good Lord's help" to take America "into a much better phase of existence lasting for a thousand years."

Taylor's remarks only make sense in the context of a cleansing, holy wrath, after which will emerge pure Constitutional defenders ready to build a new society on the ashes of the old.

"I fear that the United States is going to have to go through the ringer," said Taylor. "It's gonna be rough."

"When the time comes, when the people who are in power for the power and the glory, and there is no more power and glory left, they'll probably be looking around asking, 'Can anybody help?' And you'll say, 'Yeah, I've got some ideas. Come on over and eat a little something.' Because there probably won't be much food anyway, but if you're wise, you'll have some."

At this depressing image of future Constitutional scholars discussing the evils of the income tax and battling "debauchery" amid the scarred ruins of a post-Apocalyptic America, Taylor brightens up.

"We're gonna win this thing," he said. "I've read the last chapter, like you have, and in the end, we're gonna win this thing." "Isn't that great?" ▲

Over the Cliff

Accuracy in Media's Cliff Kincaid revels in attacking the 'liberal' press. But he reserves a special loathing for homosexuals

BY LARRY KELLER ILLUSTRATION BY JEFFREY SMITH

Cliff Kincaid is one of the American far right's most energetic and obsessive propagandists. For more than 30 years at Accuracy in Media (AIM), a right-wing outfit opposed to the "liberal" media, Kincaid has cranked out reams of material — rife with innuendo and speculation but light on facts — aimed at buttressing his far-right, xenophobic and homophobic views.

What's more, some in the media mainstream actually take him seriously.

Aside from his editorial role at AIM, the notably humorless Kincaid also runs an antigovernment "Patriot" group, America's Survival, whose stated mission is to "expose the influence of global institutions," mostly meaning the United Nations and the International Criminal Court. Ten days after Walter Cronkite's death, Kincaid wrote that the famous news anchor had been a globalist "one-worlder." Since 2008, the group's obsession has been President Obama.

While complaining mightily about the mainstream media's supposed bias, Kincaid — who declined a request for comment from the Intelligence Report — revels in his own, citing as authorities in his articles far-right ideologues and organizations that share his politics.

And what exactly are his views? Basically, Kincaid advances a hodgepodge of fairly run-of-the-mill, far-right conspiracy theories and allegations:

President Obama has "well-documented socialist connections," is the product of a "mysterious upbringing as a Muslim in Indonesia," and may well not have been born in this country. Hillary Clinton is a lesbian. Global warming is a "fraudulent scheme." And the Roman Catholic Church has been hijacked "by Marxist elements" and is "facilitating the foreign invasion of the U.S." by northbound Latinos.

But Kincaid reserves a special loathing for gays and lesbians.

He has blamed gays for corrupting the military and making America more vulnerable to terrorism. He says the "pro-homosexual media" has created the false perception of "overwhelming public support" for repeal of the military's "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy. "Establishment journalists," he has written, "are aligned with academia" ("sexual perverts masquerading as scholars") in supporting transgendered individuals — "a cruel hoax to undermine the already shaky foundation of the traditional family." He can't contain his rage at the Republicans for not expelling gays from their ranks, titling a recent article, "Is the GOP becoming the Gay Old Party?" And he has been one of the staunchest defenders of a draconian proposed law in Uganda that would impose the death penalty on large numbers of gay men — a proposal so radical that even many hard-line U.S. anti-gay groups have felt constrained to denounce it. To Kincaid, the proposed law seems merely "designed to send a message to ... the foreign homosexual lobby to keep their hands off Uganda's families and kids."

Kincaid has taken his anti-gay message on the road recently, participating in an August conference put on by the hard-edged Americans for Truth about Homosexuality where he promised to expose "gay influence on the media" and "the homosexual drive for the 'right' to donate possibly infected and contaminated blood to the nation's blood supply."

Kincaid might be easily dismissed were it not for his ability to reach the general public. He has appeared regularly on Fox News programs and he's been featured on other major television networks as well. Hate radio's Michael Savage, who has an audience of some 8 million people, has had him on. He's a regular at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference, a major event for conservative Republicans. He's appeared at other conservative confabs, such as last April's Jericho March & Conference in Washington, D.C., where he joined a mix of religious-right activists and conspiracy-oriented Patriot groups. Moreover, he's working to extend his organization's influence well into the future — AIM has become a prime training ground for aspiring “conservative” journalists.

Joe McCarthy to Vince Foster

Born in Kansas City, Mo., in 1954, Cliff Kincaid graduated with a B.A. from the University of Toledo and went to Washington, D.C., via a national journalism program headed by conservative author M. Stanton Evans, a contributing editor to Human Events, a weekly magazine. (Last year, AIM gave Evans an award to honor his “groundbreaking research into the media’s vilification of Senator Joe McCarthy” and his book, Blacklisted by History: The Untold Story of Senator Joe McCarthy and His Fight Against America’s Enemies.)

Kincaid spent seven years at Human Events and also worked as an editorial writer and newsletter editor for Iran-Contra scandal figure Oliver North at North’s Freedom Alliance foundation. In addition, Kincaid worked for Citizens United, a right-wing organization fixated on Bill Clinton that created the racially charged Willie Horton TV ads in 1988 that helped doom the presidential aspirations of Democrat Michael Dukakis.

In 1978, Kincaid joined Accuracy in Media. He has been a prolific and wordy contributor ever since.

AIM was founded as a nonprofit in 1969 by economist Reed Irvine to correct what Irvine saw as serious media errors. In truth, he was only concerned with liberal media errors. (Just last year, AIM sponsored a so-called Conservative Leadership Summit to Confront Media Bias, with Kincaid joining other far-right media and political figures for a six-hour talkfest on the topic.)

In its early years, AIM sent letters to newspaper editors asking for corrections. If newspapers refused, AIM bought ads in the publications with its corrections. Eventually, AIM began to buy stock in major media companies, enabling its representatives to speak at shareholder meetings.

When Kincaid came on board in 1978, the AIM Report was six years old. He and AIM savaged the Clintons, promoting the theory, which became received wisdom on the far right, that Clinton deputy White House counsel Vince Foster was murdered. (He was not.) Not coincidentally, that claim also was zealously pursued by conservative billionaire Richard Mellon Scaife, a major financial backer of AIM.

That kind of backing has helped to make AIM far better financed than most groups with similar views. As of April 2009, it held $3.6 million in net assets.

Calling the Kettle Black

In the event he bothers to substantiate his positions at all, Kincaid typically relies on sources who parrot his views. Take global warming. While there is consensus among the vast majority of climatologists worldwide that the earth is warming and human activity is the cause, Kincaid sees a scam perpetrated by the “religious left,” among others. In an article last January, Kincaid tried to buttress this allegation by quoting from a bizarre book by James Wanliss, a physics professor at tiny Presbyterian College in South Carolina.

Wanliss argues that the environmental movement “is a religion with a vision of sin and repentance, heaven and hell.

Its communion is organic food. Its sacraments are sex, abortion, and when all else fails, sterilization. Its saints are Al Gore and the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change. Both professing Protestants and Roman Catholics bear a burden of guilt for the current political mess we are in with the global warming and other hysterias.”

Despite his self-appointed role as a media monitor, Kincaid often settles in his own work for simple speculation. In an article last February, for example, Kincaid quoted from a couple of poems that Barrack Obama wrote at age 19 about his father. “But what if it was really about [Frank Marshall] Davis?” Kincaid asked about one of them, referring to a man he has described as Obama’s communist mentor, a “sex pervert and pothead.”

“Perverts” seem to occupy a good portion of Kincaid’s waking hours.

In 2005, he said news organizations should engage in a “Quit Gay Sex” campaign against “the dangerous and addictive homosexual lifestyle.” In the years since, he has repeatedly railed about the alleged “homosexual agenda.” Today, he never misses an opportunity to tell his readers that MSNBC host Rachel Maddow is a lesbian and that she and Washington Post editorial writer Jonathan Capehart are part of a “homosexual cabal.” Nationally syndicated conservative columnist Kathleen Parker isn’t gay, but Kincaid declared her conservatism “a farce and a fraud” after the Pulitzer Prize winner criticized the anti-gay Uganda legislation.

The Homosexual Addenda

Kincaid, who describes himself as a married father of three, gets especially worked up when writing about gays in the military. In May, he raised what he apparently saw as the haunting specter of homosexual soldiers wearing women's uniforms if the "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy were repealed. He predicted that straight soldiers would "probably leave in disgust and dismay," while others would "choose never to sign up." The military would be a "shambles," the war on terrorism "jeopardized," and a draft required "with soldiers reporting to the male homosexuals already there and in command positions." And then this gem: "They will demand sexual favors to rise in the ranks. ... [I]t is a recipe for national suicide."

Last year, AIM published a guest column by Scott Lively, a pastor who runs the anti-gay hate group Abiding Truth Ministries and co-founded another anti-gay hate group, Watchmen on the Walls. Lively is co-author of The Pink Swastika:

wondered darkly. Eventually, he warned, there could be "a homosexual takeover of the military branches."

It was Lively, too, who Kincaid relied upon heavily as a supposed expert for an article he wrote last year — one of several — that supported what has become widely known as Uganda's proposed "kill the gays" law. Lively was one of three American evangelical Christians who in 2009 visited Uganda to conduct a seminar titled, "Exposing the Truth Behind Homosexuality and the Homosexual Agenda" that was heard by thousands of that nation's citizens. The anti-gay legislation was introduced a month after the Americans' visit.

Lively suggested that the proposed law was a rational response to the homosexuality of a Ugandan king more than a century earlier and to U.S. and European activists "working aggressively to re-students from bullying.

When Jennings was appointed in May 2009 to a position in the Office of Safe & Drug Free Schools, Kincaid and AIM responded with several columns containing some of their most vicious vitriol to date. For one thing, Kincaid began promoting the theory that GLSEN had praised a "communist pervert." That would be Harry Hay, who Jennings once said inspired him. Kincaid noted the gay-rights pioneer had supported the North American Man-Boy Love Association (NAMBLA), and claimed that Hay was a communist. In fact, Jennings had only praised Hay's role in the start-up of the first ongoing gay rights group in 1948, not NAMBLA.

Even so, one of AIM's student interns posted a blog item last December on AIM's website describing Jennings as "President Obama's favorite pedophile." The next day, the organization that says it specializes in finding liberal media inaccuracies removed the item and posted a half-hearted apology, conceding that it had no evidence of Jennings "being a pedophile and personally teaching perverted sexual practices to young people."

But it was a bone that AIM just couldn't let go of. "We continue to urge the media to vigorously investigate Jennings' background" and his "role in promoting the homosexual agenda and exposing children to discussions of dangerous sexual practices," AIM said, listing three vehemently anti-gay websites as sources.

Despite Kincaid's repeated efforts to get him ousted, Jennings remains at the Department of Education.

The irony of Kincaid's stated mission of correcting media bias and his own regular flouting of basic journalistic standards apparently escapes him entirely. As the Jennings episode and others demonstrate, Kincaid is perfectly willing to engage in speculation, distorted half-truths, and unproved assertions of fact. If that means gays and others are depicted in an entirely false and demonizing light, so be it. That is "accuracy in media" — Cliff Kincaid-style. ▲

Cliff Kincaid (left) claims that controversy over Uganda's infamous "kill the gays" bill was really a White House ploy to draw attention away from the "real scandal" of its appointment of Kevin Jennings (right) to the Department of Education. Jennings founded a group dedicated to protecting straight and gay schoolchildren from bullying.

Homosexuality in the Nazi Party, which falsely claims that "the Nazi party was entirely controlled by militaristic male homosexuals throughout its short history." (In fact, Hitler violently purged gays within the party's own ranks and sent thousands of others to concentration camps.)

Backing up Kincaid's arguments, Lively warned of a mass exodus of "normal men" from the military if homosexuals were allowed to serve openly. "Will proud young men being honed to become weapons of aggression against America's enemies tolerate being ogled in the showers or touched inappropriately or bunking near sexually-active sodomites?" Lively homosexualize their nation." When both The Washington Post and The New York Times editorialized in favor of the United States ending foreign aid to Uganda if the proposed legislation became law, Kincaid wrote that the threat of rescinding foreign aid "to force a country to accept the homosexual lifestyle is morally wrong."

The true reason for the "orchestrated controversy" surrounding the Uganda bill, according to Kincaid, was to divert attention from the "real scandal" of the Obama Administration's appointment of Kevin Jennings to a post in the Department of Education. Jennings founded the Gay, Lesbian and Straight Education Network, or GLSEN, to protect both gay and straight

BY ROBERT STEINBACK

AMERICANS ARE GENERALLY POSSESSED OF AN OPTIMISM that the democratic electoral process will filter out extremists, radicals and dangerous ideologues. Indeed, there is a temptation to chortle with satisfaction that the number of voters who wrote in neo-Nazi Billy Roper as their 2010 choice for governor of Arkansas wouldn't fill the seats in an undersized fast-food restaurant.

Still, a 2010 candidate who has argued that private businesses should be free to deny service to black people now sits in the U.S. Senate. A candidate who believes the Southern states should secede again and form a confederacy dominated by white people won a seat in the Arkansas legislature, while an antigovernment "Patriot" who grossly exaggerates the criminality of undocumented immigrants (who studies have shown are on average much less criminal than native-born Americans) captured a California Assembly seat. Even failure energized some right-wing extremists: A white supremacist received one of every three votes cast in his New York congressional district, while another in West Virginia received enough votes for his "party" to boast of a moral victory.

The Intelligence Report has compiled an accounting of 22 men and one woman with extreme right-wing views who sought public office during the 2010 election season — including five who succeeded. Those who won their races are marked "elected."

Bertram ran openly as an A3P candidate. A3P's founder, William Daniel Johnson, supports the deportation of all non-white immigrants and U.S. citizens, including anyone with any "ascertainable trace of Negro blood." Bertram for years personally distributed to white people in Ohio and West Virginia copies of Don Wassall's Nationalist Times, which promotes white nationalist and anti-Semitic ideologies as well as government conspiracy theories. In a video, Bertram denounced "gay and lesbian studies" as "liberal nonsense." EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-Semitic, conspiracy-mongering

Condit promotes anti-Semitic and anti-Zionist conspiracy theories. He believes the Federal Reserve Bank is engineering a New World Order. He embraces the theories of the late Father Denis Fahey, an Irish Catholic priest who stridently opposed institutions he felt conflicted with Catholic order, including communism, freemasonry and Judaism, all of which he believed were intertwined. Condit in 2007 said he believed that "Zionists" had successfully infiltrated the Vatican II Catholic reform conferences in the 1960s intent on "bending the doctrines of the Catholic Church to accord with the demands of the Zionist interests." Condit once stated that a "Phase II" of the Sept. 11 attacks, intended to benefit the Israeli government, was imminent.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-immigration, anti-government "Patriot"

Donnelly in 2005 founded what became the largest anti-immigrant Minuteman chapter in California. He advocates a California version of Arizona's S.B. 1070, which makes it a state crime to be in this country illegally. Donnelly is prone to exaggeration. In interviews, he claimed to have heard the screams of women being raped in the Mexican desert near the border. According to LA Weekly, Donnelly once wrote that Muslim extremists were proselytizing to "so-called 'innocent' illegal aliens" with the aim of destroying the American Southwest. "It is not a stretch," he wrote, "to picture a revolt in Los Angeles, whose population is comprised of [sic] over 50 percent illegal aliens. At the [current] rate of influx and births, it will be 80 percent illegal alien within a decade." A more reliable estimate places the number of undocumented immigrants in Los Angeles County at about 7.3% of its population of 10.4 million. Donnelly claimed undocumented immigrants accounted for "nearly one-third of our prison space" — a demonizing assertion, once also pushed by CNN's Lou Dobbs, with no basis in fact.

RESULTS General election: Received 7.9% (1,718 votes) of the 21,503 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Antigovernment "sovereign citizen"

Hemingway-El describes himself as a member of the Louisiana-based Washitaw De Dugdumoundwah, also known as the Washitaw Moorish Nation and the Washitaw Empire. The group claims status as a sovereign entity not subject to U.S. or state laws, and says the 828,000-square-mile territory of the Louisiana Purchase of 1803 was land stolen from the Washitaw, a predominantly black group, by the United States. The group's leader once filed an $80 quadrillion claim against the United States. State authorities have investigated allegations the group has engaged in money laundering, offshore banking fraud and other practices derived from its antigovernment "common law," or "sovereign citizen," ideology. Though Hemingway-El invokes sovereign citizen ideas, he told an interviewer he does not advocate defying the law. He complied with a state law requiring candidates for public office to swear they are U.S. citizens.

OFFICE SOUGHT

PARTY Tea Party-backed Republican

RESULTS Primary: Won with 50.7% (197,629 votes) of the 390,108

votes cast. General election: Finished third with 11.1% (199,034 votes) of the 1,787,730 votes cast. (See also Tom Tancredo, below.)

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY World-government conspiracy theorist

Maes interpreted a United Nations-sponsored program encouraging cities to promote bicycle riding as being part of a plot to undermine American sovereignty. "This is bigger than it looks like on the surface, and it could threaten our personal freedoms," Maes said, according to the Denver Post. "At first, I thought, 'Gosh, public transportation, what's wrong with that, and what's wrong with people parking their cars and riding their bikes? ... But if you do your homework and research, you realize ICLEI [the U.N.'s International Council for Local Environmental Initiatives] is part of a greater strategy to rein in American cities under a United Nations treaty.'" Denver is one of 600 American member cities of ICLEI, which promotes sustainable development.

RESULTS

Primary:

Unopposed. General election: Won with 53.4% (4,041 votes) of the 7,561 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Neo-Confederate, white nationalist

Mauch is a member of the League of the South (LOS), a neo-Confederate organization formed in 1994 that advocates a second Southern secession and espouses bitter hostility toward the United States – an “alien occupier.” The LOS envisions a Christian theocratic state run by an “Anglo-Celtic” – that is, white – elite that would legally dominate both racial and religious minorities. In a 2008 interview, Mauch referred to the Confederate battle flag as “a symbol of Jesus Christ above all else. It’s a symbol of Biblical government.” (The LOS also describes the battle flag as the “antithesis” of the Stars and Stripes.) For seven years, Mauch also was a local unit “commander” with the Sons of Confederate Veterans (SCV), stepping down in 2009. Over the last decade, the Southern heritage group has been wracked by a kind of internal civil war between moderates and racial extremists.

Ray McBerry Jr.

Governor, Georgia

PARTY Republican

RESULTS

Primary: Finished sixth in a field of seven, receiving 2.5% (17,171 votes) of the 680,499 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Neo-Confederate, white nationalist

McBerry is a former member of the Georgia chapter of the League of the South (see Loy Mauch, above), and served as its chair before resigning in October. “We believe in the League of the South that for the most part, the South is inherently more conservative and more Christian in our values and our political beliefs than much of the other parts of America. ...

[T]he South is the only part of America that is still American to any degree,” McBerry states in a video. He refuses to salute the American flag. The League of the South’s founder routinely attacks egalitarianism as a radical-left “Jacobin” doctrine and opposes interracial marriage; its essayists have defended legal segregation as a doctrine meant to ensure the racial integrity of both white and black Americans.

Tom Metzger

OFFICE SOUGHT U.S. House of Representatives, Indiana District 3

PARTY Unspecified

RESULTS Received 0.005% (10 votes) of the 185,049 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Neo-Nazi, Ku Klux Klan, Christian Identity

A guttural racist, Metzger is a former California grand dragon of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. In the mid-1980s, he founded White Aryan Resistance (WAR), one of the leading neo-Nazi groups of the period. In a 2002 interview, Metzger said, “My total concern is with the survival of the white European people in North America.” He is an ordained minister of Christian Identity theology, whose adherents typically believe that Jews are the literal “seed of Satan,” people of color are soulless “mud people,” and the Bible is the history of the white race. He promotes a particularly nasty version of anti-Semitism. “Jews are supreme masters of manipulation and deceit,” according to Metzger’s website. “They run and distort our foreign policy because lazy and corrupt non-Jew leaders had previously found them valuable as grifters.” Metzger’s 2010 race was a far cry from his earlier, more successful runs for public office. In 1980, he won the three-way Democratic primary for California’s 43rd Congressional District with 37.1% (33,071 votes) of the votes cast before going on to lose the general election with 13.4% (46,361 votes). In 1982, Metzger ran in an 11-way Democratic primary for Senate in California, coming in sixth with 2.8% (76,502 votes) of the votes cast.

Frazier Glenn Miller Jr.

OFFICE SOUGHT U.S. Senate, Missouri

PARTY Unspecified

RESULTS General election: Received 0.0004% (7 votes) of the 1,943,899 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY White supremacist, anti-Semitic

Miller promised that if elected, he would “work ... to expose the jewish [sic] domination of the US government, the mass media, the federal reserve bank [sic], and the decadent American culture.” He has advocated incentive payments to white Americans to produce white children. Miller formerly headed the Carolina Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, which later morphed into the White Patriot Party. Miller went on the lam in 1986 after “Every non-White on the planet has to become extinct. We need to remove these minor-league amateur races out of the game, and refine the playoff brackets a bit, if you get my meaning. The whole world is ours, and the only part of the earth that non-Whites should inherit is however much it requires to cover them.”

mailing a letter to 5,000 people calling for “total war” against the feds, blacks and Jews. Authorities finally tear-gassed him out of a mobile home in Ozark, Mo. Miller testified against 14 leading white supremacists in a 1988 Arkansas sedition trial and is still viewed as a “white race traitor” by many former allies, although he remains an active white supremacist. Miller had run in three earlier electoral campaigns. In 1984, he came in eighth in a 10-way Democratic primary race for North Carolina governor, receiving 0.61% (5,790 votes) of the votes cast. In 1986, he received 3.17% (6,662 votes) of the votes cast in the Republican primary for U.S. Senate, coming in last in a field of three. And in 2006, Miller received 0.01% (23 votes) of the votes cast in his bid as an independent for Missouri’s 7th Congressional District, coming in last in a three-way race.

Ryan Joseph Murdough

OFFICE SOUGHT New Hampshire House of Representatives, District 8

PARTY Republican and American Third Position (A3P)

RESULTS Primary: Finished last among five candidates for three seats, securing 11.3% (296 votes) of the 2,623 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY White supremacist Murdough is the New Hampshire state chairman of A3P (see also Harry Bertram, above), a white supremacist political party whose leader, William Daniel Johnson, advocates the deportation of all non-whites, even U.S. citizens, including anyone with any “ascertainable trace of Negro blood.” Another A3P leader, Kevin B. MacDonald, has claimed that Jews are genetically programmed to undermine Gentile societies. Murdough claims he isn’t a racist because he doesn’t hate people of other races. “I just don’t want to live around areas that are heavily, predominantly non-white,” he told the Concord Monitor. However, according to writer Mark Berman on the Opposing Views website, Murdough once tweeted, “In celebration of Black History month, I am going to recognize what they do best, commit crime, get AIDS/STD’s, blame whitey, cry racism.”

Chelene Nightingale

OFFICE SOUGHT

Governor, California

PARTY Constitution

RESULTS General election: Finished third, receiving 1.7% (166,308 votes) of the 10,095,185 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Patriot, anti-immigration, “birther,” conspiracy theorist Nightingale was director of Save Our State, an anti-illegal immigration group in California, when she joined the Constitution Party in 2009. She espouses numerous right-wing conspiracy theories, including “chemtrails” and the claim that 9/11 was an “inside job.” In May, Nightingale conjured up several familiar demons of the radical right, saying, “[T]he Bilderbergs, George Soros, the cartels – they’re all working on the destruction of America with their open borders.” After the election, Nightingale became spokeswoman for the SoCal Patriot Coalition, whose founder is Jeff Schwilk, former leader of the San Diego Minutemen (SDMM). The SDMM was a border-patrol group so extreme that even the groups from which it cribbed its name – the Minuteman Project and the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps – wanted nothing to do with it. Schwilk’s SDMM members accosted and physically intimidated migrants and would-be day-labor employers.

Norm Olson

OFFICE SOUGHT Lieutenant governor, Alaska

PARTY Alaskan Independence

RESULTS Withdrew before election.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Antigovernment “Patriot” militia, conspiracy theorist Olson in the early 1990s founded the Michigan Militia, which was thrust into the national spotlight after the 1995 Oklahoma City bombing. Olson told reporters then that conspirators Terry Nichols and Timothy McVeigh had attended a meeting but were not encouraged to return. Olson was booted out of the Michigan Militia after offering the bizarre theory that the Japanese government was behind the McVeigh bombing — a statement he later said he should have “fully corroborated.” By 2005, Olson had moved to Alaska, where he soon formed the Alaska Citizens Militia (ACM). The ACM lists 17 “acts of war” on its website, including “Mandatory medical anything” and “Involuntary involvement in anything.”

PARTY Tea Party-backed Republican

votes cast. General election Won with 55.7% (755,411 votes) of the 1,356,468 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Right-wing libertarian Paul rode Tea Party support to upset the Kentucky GOP’s preferred candidate. During the campaign, many of Paul’s unorthodox political beliefs came to light, including his assertion that private businesses shouldn’t have been compelled to comply with the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that barred discrimination. In a 2002 letter to the Bowling Green Daily News, Paul also criticized the Fair Housing Act, explaining that “a free society will abide unofficial, private discrimination, even when that means allowing hate-filled groups to exclude people based on skin color.” After winning the Republican primary and being subjected to national criticism, Paul issued a press release declaring “unequivocally” that he would not support any effort to repeal the Civil Rights Act of 1964 that he had criticized just days earlier. This January, Paul sent out a fundraising letter declaring that Hillary Clinton and the “global gun-grabbers” at the United Nations are trying “finally strip you and me of ALL our freedoms” by signing a treaty that would “almost certainly” force the U.S. to “CONFISCATE and DESTROY” all “unauthorized” civilian firearms. (In fact, the treaty being discussed has nothing to do with regulating guns in the U.S., something that would be impossible in any event under the Constitution.) Paul added that “the United Nations has been hell-bent on bringing the United States to its knees” since its founding in 1945. Last fall, he said he wanted to abolish the U.S. Department of Education so it couldn't, for instance, mandate teaching kindergartners "that Susie has two mommies," a reference to same-sex couples with children. On immigration, Paul wants to erect a physical or electronic fence along all U.S. land borders, complete with "satellite surveillance" and "helicopter stations," and deploy "any unnecessary foreign units" of the American military to the border.

RESULTS General election: Finished last of three candidates, receiving 8.8% (1,226 votes) of the 14,009 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-immigrant, Holocaust denier

Rizoli, along with his twin brother Joe, has used his public-access cable television show — "Illegal Immigration Chat" — to spout relentless and vicious attacks on the "criminaliens" who make up the Brazilian community of Framingham, Mass., which comprises about 20% of the town's population. "Framingham has been turned into a Brazilian slave camp," Jim Rizoli told reporters in 2006. Rizoli, who run a nativist extremist group with his brother called Concerned Citizens and Friends of Illegal Immigration Law Enforcement, has also repeatedly suggested that the Holocaust did not occur or has been greatly exaggerated.

PARTY Unspecified (ran as a write-in candidate)

RESULTS General election: Received 0.006% (49 votes) of the 781,381 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY White supremacist, neo-Nazi

After a long career with other neo-Nazi groups, Roper founded his own white supremacist White Revolution (WR) in 2002. Its mission statement: "We seek to secure the existence of our people and a future for our children by creating the opportunity for the establishment of a government which has only the interests of our group [white people] in mind." In an E-mail to members of the neo-Nazi National Alliance (of which he was then deputy membership coordinator) immediately after the Sept. 11, 2001 terrorist attacks, Roper said, "The enemy of our enemy is, for now at least, our friends. ...[A]nyone who is willing to drive a plane into a building to kill jews [sic] is alright [sic] by me. I wish our members had half as much testicular fortitude." In a 2005 interview, Roper added: "Every non-White on the planet has to become extinct. We need to remove these minor-league amateur races out of the game, and refine the playoff brackets a bit, if you get my meaning. The whole world is ours, and the only part of the earth that non-Whites should inherit is however much it requires to cover them."

James C. "Jim" Russell

OFFICE SOUGHT U.S. House of

Representatives, New York District 18

PARTY Republican

RESULTS Primary: Unopposed. General election: Received 37.6% (70,413 votes) of the 187,364 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY White supremacist, anti-Semitic

Russell is on the editorial advisory board of The Occidental Quarterly, a white nationalist publication. He denounces interracial marriage and has written favorably of eugenics, the long-discredited pseudo-science of race breeding. In a 2001 article, Russell noted an "excellent inquiry" by Elmer Pendell: "In our own civilization we see a lessening of the struggle for survival. Welfare does away with natural selection. ... Compassion, unfortunately, is the enemy of biological progress." To this, Russell added, "While liberals and universalists constantly yammer about 'bringing us all together,' and how 'diversity is our strength,' it may be suggested that ... culture in human societies ... must establish a sense of group identity so that the individual knows whom to act altruistically toward and whom to mate with." Russell quoted T.S. Eliot's formula for the ideal society: "The population should be homogeneous. What is still more important is unity of religious background, and reasons of race and culture combine to make any large number of free-thinking Jews undesirable." The New York Republican Party withdrew its support of Russell after news organizations wrote about the article during his campaign.

Daniel B. Schruender

OFFICE SOUGHT

Unified School District board, Rialto, Calif.

PARTY Unspecified

RESULTS General election: Finished last among six candidates for two open seats, receiving 9.6% (2,290 votes) of the 23,756 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Neo-Nazi

Schruender formerly headed the California chapter of the neo-Nazi Aryan Nations, which broke up into weak and small factions around the country after being financially crippled by a Southern Poverty Law Center lawsuit in 2000 and the 2004 death of founder Richard Butler. Schruender's personal blog, "Sense and Sensibility" carries a sub-headline describing the site as "now affiliated with the American Nazi Party," and Schruender describes himself there as an "official supporter" of the group. The blog is replete with swastikas, attacks on Jews, a reference to President Obama as "King Kongo Obongo," and a photograph of Adolf Hitler — "our REAL commander," as the shot is captioned. As media scrutiny increased during the campaign, Schruender complained, "The Jew media is really doing a hatchet job on me since they found out I'm running for school board and in Aryan Nations."

Jeffrey Stankiewicz

OFFICE SOUGHT Tax assessor, Boundary

County, Idaho

PARTY Constitution

RESULTS General election: Received 19.6% (654 votes) of the 3,330 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Antigovernment militia

Stankiewicz serves as major of the 21st Battalion of the North Idaho Light Foot Militia. “We have our enemies,” he told the Bonnors Ferry Herald in 2009. “China and Russia are both building up military and flexing their muscles.” His battalion, he said, is preparing for an economic collapse. “We don’t want this to happen, we hope it doesn’t happen, but we want to be prepared for it if it does,” he said, sounding themes familiar in the antigovernment “Patriot” movement. “When the truck stops delivering food and people’s federal checks stop coming there could be rioting in cities.” The militia’s “standards” include not only repelling foreign aggression and invasions but also “encouraging and showing reason why all citizens should stand stoutly against socialism, fascism, communism, humanism and all forms of tyranny.” Stankiewicz has called President Obama a socialist.

Tom Tancredo

OFFICE SOUGHT

Governor, Colorado.

PARTY American Constitution

RESULTS General election: Finished second in a three-way race with

36.4% (651,232 votes) of the 1,787,730 votes cast. (See Dan Maes, above.)

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-immigration, conspiracy theorist

Tancredo promotes a hard-line “deport ‘em all” stance on immigration. As a congressman, he introduced bills to virtually choke off all immigration. In 2005, he declared – inaccurately – that federal prisons were overflowing with undocumented immigrants. “They’re coming here to kill you, and you, and me, and my grandchildren,” he said. In 2006, Tancredo addressed a crowd that included many members of the neo-Confederate League of the South (see Loy Mauch, above) from a podium draped in a Confederate battle flag and joined in the singing of “Dixie,” a favorite anthem of white supremacists. Tancredo in 2006 referred to Miami as a “Third World country.” In 2009, he called the National Council of La Raza, the nation’s largest Hispanic civil rights organization, a “Latino KKK without the hoods or the noose.”

James A. Traficant Jr.

OFFICE SOUGHT

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-Semitic, conspiracy theorist

Traficant served nine years in Congress before being convicted of bribery, racketeering and other charges and serving seven years in prison. He told Fox News: “I believe that Israel has a powerful stranglehold on the American government. ... They control both members of the House and the Senate. They have us involved in wars in which we have little or no interest. ... They [Jews] control much of the media, they control much of the commerce of the country, and ... they own the Congress.” Traficant gave a lengthy interview to American Free Press, a newspaper founded and run by longtime racist, anti-Semite and Christian Identity adherent Willis Carto.

U.S. House of Representatives, Iowa District 5

PARTY Republican

RESULTS Primary: Unopposed. General election: Won with 63.9% (128,363 votes) of the 200,812 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-immigrant, anti-gay King has a long record of inflammatory and inaccurate statements about undocumented immigrants. In May 2006, he published the grossly exaggerated claim that undocumented immigrants killed an average of 25 Americans per day – either by murder or by illegal activities such as driving drunk. If true, that would be the equivalent of more than half of all homicides nationwide in most years. King has also warned that if marriage is not restricted to one man and one woman, children could be taken away and raised collectively in “warehouses.” King extolled Sen. Joseph McCarthy of 1950s communist-hunting infamy as a “hero for America.” For a time, King publicly questioned details of President Obama’s birth certificate, although he later backed away from extreme “birther” rhetoric.

Russell Pearce REELECTED

OFFICE SOUGHT

Arizona Senate, District 18

PARTY Republican

RESULTS Primary: Unopposed. General election: Won with 56.6% (17,552 votes) of the 31,023 votes cast.

EXTREMIST IDEOLOGY Anti-immigrant Pearce gained national prominence as the principal sponsor and nominal author of Arizona’s S.B. 1070, which makes it a state crime to be in this country as an undocumented immigrant. A federal judge enjoined parts of that bill, and the Obama administration has challenged its constitutionality. But numerous other state legislatures, caught up in anti-immigrant fever, have vowed to pursue similar laws. Pearce’s profile is spangled with associations with right-wing extremists, including neo-Nazi J.T. Ready, a former member of the National Socialist Movement. Pearce once endorsed Ready (and described him as “a true patriot”) when Ready ran for the Mesa City Council in 2006. A former deputy sheriff, Pearce also forwarded an anti-Semitic article from the neo-Nazi National Alliance to supporters in October 2005. When the matter became public, Pearce claimed he hadn’t fully read it. ▲

Tainted Thule

A leading member of a now-defunct ‘esoteric’ neo-Nazi group describes its unusual beliefs and how he came to reject them

Espousing highbrow “Aryan” ideas, the White Order of Thule (WOT) was a neo-Nazi spiritualist group in the closing years of the 1990s (the name Thule refers to the northernmost habitable regions known to ancient Greek geographers). Founded by imprisoned cocaine dealer Peter Georgacarakos, art student Michael Lujan and new age occultist Joseph Kerrick — eccentrics who considered themselves the intellectual vanguard of the white supremacy movement — WOT required inductees to advance through “degrees of membership,” studying German philosopher Friedrich Nietzsche, Adolf Hitler and others. The group’s belief system promoted “Nietzschean notions of the Superman against Judeo-Christian religion,” as well as the darker sides of paganism, scholar Nicholas Goodrick-Clarke wrote in Black Sun: Aryan Cults, Esoteric Nazism, and the Politics of Identity, a seminal 2003 work on what’s often called “esoteric Nazism.” Among the White Order’s core beliefs was the idea of Aryan superiority as supposedly embodied in Greco-Roman culture. While WOT avoided overt acts of violence in promoting an all-white nation in North America, one of its more prominent members, Leo Felton, went to prison for plotting to bomb Jewish and black landmarks and incite a race war. (After his arrest, to the shock of his comrades and his skinhead girlfriend, it emerged that Felton’s father was black.) Nathan Pett, also known as Nate Zorn, was a member of the group and worked on both of its publications — Crossing the Abyss, a newsletter that claimed to shed “light on the murky area between cutting-edge Aryan pagan spirituality and revolutionary realpolitik,” and another called Fenris Wolf. Today an avowed critic of the white supremacy movement, Pett spoke with the Southern Poverty Law Center about the White Order and his own eventual dismissal of racist ideas.

How would you describe the makeup and identity of the White Order of Thule?

They were a very motley crew of eccentric people that weren’t satisfied or didn’t fit in with [more traditional neo-Nazi groups like] the Hammerskins or the American Front or the National Alliance. It was this pseudo-intellectual group, guys who were smarter than some of the knucklehead skinheads I knew. The group catered to people who felt that they wanted something a little smarter, more professional, and a little bit more elitist. But it was really a prison-run fascist book club, more or less. I say that because most of the members hadn’t met each other.

What were the group’s core beliefs?

The more intellectual people would deny it, but it’s all the same crap [as in less pretentious parts of the white supremacist movement] in hindsight for me.

They would combine theosophy [a mystical religious philosophy founded in the 19th century that also influenced some German Nazis] with pagan beliefs, primarily more Greco-Roman, which is different than most of the other racist groups obsessed with the Nordic thing. They rejected that in favor of this more Mediterranean, right-wing, pagan mindset.

And as you got more into what they called study, you started to find they also dabbled in things like Christian mysticism, but rejected mainstream Christianity and Christian Identity [a racist variant of Christianity that says Jews are biologically descended from Satan and people of color do not have souls] as unsound. Now you might ask, why? They're all racist and they're all the same. But they don't look at it that way. It was an alternative to the other white separatist, white nationalist, white supremacist groups.

Did that thinking draw a large base of followers when the group was most active?

We had a hard time getting a lot of followers because, as you know, the white power movement is very right wing. That goes back to the John Birch Society [that was founded in 1958], very anti-communist. But the White Order would promote things like Stalin as a good leader, and so forth. And that's why the group never caught on — the white supremacist movement will always be right wing. It will always be anti-communist and xenophobic.

Of course, I always felt bringing leftist philosophy into this was just a front. I don't really think you can be a neo-Nazi and truly be a leftist thinker or a progressive or a liberal. Instead, it was catering to people that were looking for an alternative religion, people who felt they wanted something supposedly a little smarter. You're dealing with a con artist, after all. Peter Georgacarakos was the number one con artist you will ever deal with. I mean, let's face it: the group is a cult. It was about getting people to join and follow the leader, very similar to Jim Jones' People's Temple.

A cult? What can you say about that?

It was very much a cult of personality surrounding one man, Georgacarakos. He wanted to be the godhead of this group. It's kind of why Lujan got tired of it, and why I got tired of it. Overall, he's a good example of why when you talk about any type of discrimination, whether its discrimination against people because of sexual orientation, or their economic background, or their nationality, or their religion, or race, there's always a Hitler type that wants to be a figure-head. And that's Georgacarakos.

The others wanted to follow the leader — Joseph Kerrick was more or less a former hippie, new age kind of cult person. He has been in every new age cult that you can think of. Mike Lujan is another guy. He's what you call a joiner and followed Charles Manson for years.

Was the group sizeable enough to be divided into chapters?

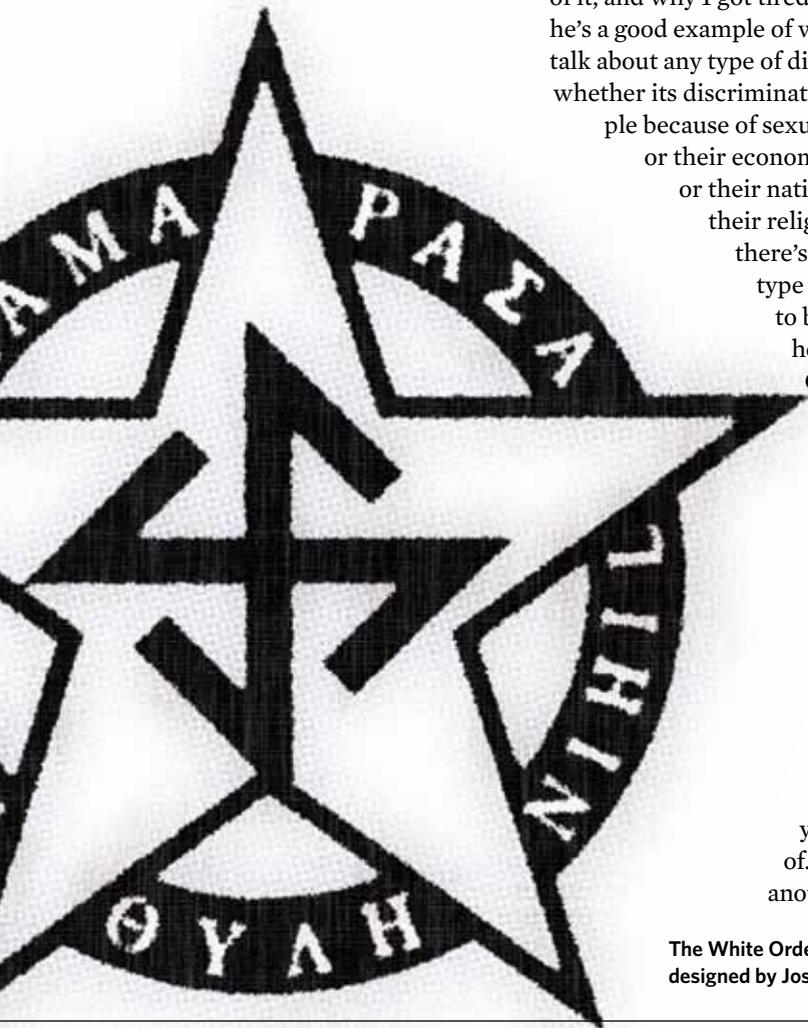

The chapter thing is funny. Let's face it — the White Order of Thule had such a small amount of people. The chapter in Virginia was just Michael Lujan and a P.O. box. The same with me in Washington state. I was the only guy there. I had one or two people I knew who I tried to get interested, but it was so bizarre to most white supremacists to do the weird mix of philosophy. Most people just didn't want to get into it, you know? It was so esoteric. People couldn't understand what the hell it meant, including me.

So did you feel conned when you left the group?

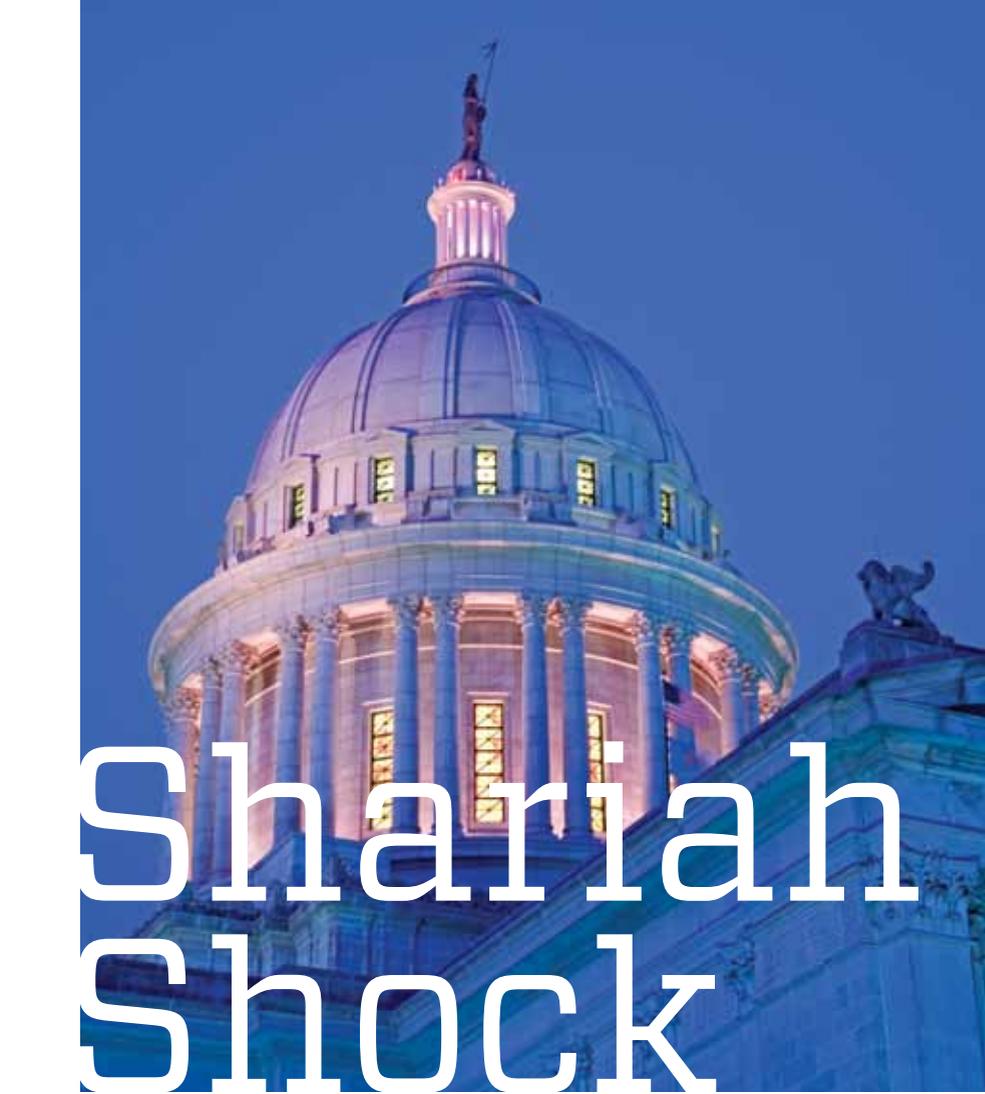

Something happened when I worked at a fish market in Baton Rouge, near the Louisiana State University campus. Louisiana is a strange place for a white supremacist [because of its multicultural population]. I still don't understand how David Duke can have so much support.

But this was a big market of about 50 to 100 employees. Everyone was Caucasian, except for a Hispanic woman and a black guy. And here is the ironic thing about that — the guy that I identified with more than anybody else was the black guy. We had a similar sense of humor and we really hit it off, because we were basically forced to have to work together. He was such a good guy that it started to really make me doubt my own beliefs. I actually thought, "If I wasn't a damn skinhead, this guy would have been a great friend."

So it's like living a double life, and I started to get wise to the fact I was being lied to. And that puts a lot of doubt in your mind. ▲

The White Order of Thule's sigil — a sign or image that is considered magical — was designed by Joseph Kerrick and incorporates a Nazi swastika.

Shariah Shock

Oklahoma has forbidden Islamic religious code. But its new law is nothing more than political posturing and Muslim-bashing

BY LEAH NELSON

Oklahoma State Rep. Cory Williams is exasperated. He was one of only 12 state legislators to resist the political stampede to put before voters a referendum to prohibit state judges from considering Islamic Shariah or international law in their rulings.

He derided his colleagues' fervor as "irresponsible" and "pandering." Voters, Williams said, "think that their legislators are not screwing around and putting things on the ballot [just] to get a certain electorate out there. They think that if the legislators put it there, then there's an issue" that must be addressed, he told the Intelligence Report. "What they don't pay us to do is be political assholes."

Legal experts say banning Shariah law is superfluous; there is no mechanism by which any foreign criminal or civil code can trump U.S. laws. Business experts add that such a ban could hurt the image of domestic companies doing business overseas. Yet when Oklahoma voters got the chance to vote on State Question 755, the so-called "Save Our State Amendment," 70% approved it.

Rep. Rex Duncan, who authored and co-sponsored the House joint resolution that later was presented to voters as S.Q. 755, said it was a "pre-emptive strike" that would stop "activist judges" from imposing the type of repressive justice found in the most oppressive Islamic regimes.

Duncan made national news with his proposal. In June, he told MSNBC's Contessa Brewer that Oklahoma voters

"understand that this is a war for the survival of America. It's a cultural war, it's a social war, it's a war for the survival of our country."

Two days after the vote, Muneer Awad, a lawyer and executive director of Oklahoma's chapter of the Council on American-Islamic Relations (CAIR), filed a lawsuit alleging that the amendment violated his and other Muslims' constitutional rights. U.S. District Judge Vicki Miles-LaGrange issued a preliminary injunction on Nov. 29 to prevent the vote from being certified.

Could it Happen Here?

Shariah law is derived from the Koran and the teachings of Mohammed. Like other systems of religious law – Jewish Halachic law, for instance – it establishes guidelines for major life events like marriage, birth and death, and outlines conduct that is forbidden and required. Interpretations of what the rules are and precisely how they are to be followed vary among different branches of Islam and among Muslims as individuals. It also varies among Muslim-majority countries, whose implementation of Shariah law ranges from nominal to strict. In countries like Saudi Arabia, where there is little or no separation of secular and religious authority, courts of law may mete out punishments according to Shariah law as interpreted by imams.

At loggerheads: State Rep. Rex Duncan (left) says he pushed a legally meaningless ban on using Shariah law in Oklahoma because “it’s a war for survival of our country,” but for Muslim Muneer Awad, who wants to be buried according to his religion’s custom, the ban feels more like a war on him and other Muslims.

Awad’s challenge to the Save Our State Amendment got little visible support from his fellow Oklahomans. Islamophobes, however, had a field day. Reposting an article titled “Taliban chops off man’s hand for theft,” JihadWatch.org’s Robert Spencer asked, “Isn’t it great that Judge Vicki Miles-LaGrange has made Oklahoma safe for Sharia?”

That the punishment in question was meted out in an illegal court controlled by a banned branch of the Taliban operating in lawless northwest Pakistan clearly didn’t matter to Spencer, a longtime Muslim-basher who co-heads Stop Islamization of America with blogger Pamela Geller of AtlasShrugs.com, a leader in condemning an Islamic center planned for lower Manhattan last year.

Unlike Spencer, legal scholars do distinguish between “law” as defined by rogue Taliban thugs and law as it is used in American courtrooms — and they say comparisons like the one Spencer made are baloney.

“Oklahoma law, like the law of every other state in the country, prohibits people from chopping other peoples’ hands off. An imam cannot chop a hand off. Anyone who did would be in violation of very serious criminal law and they would go to jail,” said Paul Finkelman, President William McKinley Distinguished Professor of Law and Public Policy at Albany (N.Y.) Law School and Editor-in-Chief of Religion and American Law: An Encyclopedia.

Joseph Thai, a professor of constitutional law at the University of Oklahoma, agreed. “The reason that won’t happen is the same reason it has never happened. We have never had anyone’s hand cut off in Oklahoma because we have this background principle that states will not enforce foreign laws that are contrary to the law of the states. ... It is not just stuff like cutting off hands and genital mutilation; Oklahoma will not enforce Texas law if it’s contrary to Oklahoma law,” he said. “We do not enforce foreign law that is contrary to state policy. We never have and we never will.”

That doesn’t mean certain Shariah principles would never find application in Oklahoma, which is home to an estimated 20,000-30,000 Muslims. Awad, for instance, specifies in his will that his body be prepared in accord with Islamic law as described in “Shahih Bukhari, Volume 2, Book 23, Number 345.” Although there is no contradiction between this Islamic tradition and Oklahoma state law, the execution of wills is subject to court oversight — and if Oklahoma courts were forbidden to heed Shariah law, Awad argued in his petition for an injunction, his will could not be carried out, violating his constitutional right to freely exercise his religion.

Awad has been outspoken in denouncing the law as unconstitutional, bigoted, and prejudicial to Muslims. In return for his trouble, he’s received an avalanche of hate mail — some of it from beyond Oklahoma.

“The Muslims are so fucking stupid that they don’t realize southern people have our own brand of justice,” wrote a man from Texas, who may or may not have realized the irony of his remark. “Again, muslim asshole(s), you are not welcome in The United States. Go fuck camels and whatever else you do like worshipping devils in some other country that will have you. Get out of America. You are not welcome here!!!”

Wrote another: “[W]e will work together in this country Jews and Gentiles to destroy those mosques built here, and cover them with the blood of swine, because you’re [sic] religion is nothing more than a superstition.”

And a third: “Take your Islamic laws, shove them up your ass and go back to where you came from. You lice infested bastards are not welcome and that goes, [sic] for that Black Bastard that sits in the White House.”

Rex Duncan’s ‘Enemy’

Duncan, the resolution’s enthusiastic author, told the media that he was inspired by a 2010 case in New Jersey family court, where a judge denied a Muslim woman’s request for a restraining order against her husband, who was raping and beating her.

The New Jersey judge did not deny the woman’s allegations of abuse, but he ruled that the husband’s responsibility for his behavior was mitigated because his understanding of Shariah law informed him that he was entitled to have intercourse with his wife whenever he desired. Under New Jersey law, nonconsensual sex is rape even between a married couple.

A state appeals court pointedly overturned the decision, saying it clearly violated the legal principal that no foreign law can supplant U.S. law. But the mere fact that the clearly erroneous lower court ruling could happen in America at all was enough to convince

Campbell’s Soup goes halal with approval from Hamas-linked ISNA

Muslim-basher Robert Spencer, whose Jihad Watch website is quick to accuse groups of links to terrorism, suggested falsely that an Oklahoma judge was making the state a haven for Islamic religious law.

Duncan that Oklahoma was in desperate need of protection – even though no problems regarding Shariah law had ever been reported in Oklahoma.

Duncan did not reply to repeated requests for interviews from the Intelligence Report. In the interview with MSNBC’s Brewer, however, he said: “Oklahomans recognize that America was founded on Judeo-Christian values, and we’re unapologetically grateful that God has blessed America and blessed Oklahoma. And State Question 755, the Save Our State Amendment, is just a simple effort to ensure that our courts are not used to undermine those founding principles and turn Oklahoma into something that our founding fathers and our great-grandparents wouldn’t recognize.”

“Frankly, it’s the face of the enemy. It’s the face of the enemy, and we need to call it what it is,” he added. “Oklahomans are going to do that, and they’re going show other states what it looks like to take a leadership role in saving their own future and the sanctity of their state court system.”

Joseph Thai, the Oklahoma law professor, could hardly disagree more strongly. “The repudiation of the New Jersey case by the New Jersey court of appeals demonstrates that our legal system works, that we do not allow foreign law,” he said. “Why in the absence of 755 has this never happened? It’s because American courts will not enforce foreign laws that are contrary to public policy.”

As it happens, at least one matter involving Shariah law has been adjudicated in Oklahoma state court. The outcome aligned precisely with what Finkelman and Thai predicted.

The judge, who requested anonymity to avoid any possible impact on Awad’s lawsuit, told the Report what happened when a married Muslim couple brought a dispute over a premarital dowry agreement to the courtroom. Oklahoma law does not recognize dowry rights, so the judge ruled that the agreement was not enforceable under state law. Neither party appealed.

“I’m not going to enforce anything that is contrary to Oklahoma law,” the judge explained.

Islamophobia on Steroids

S.Q. 755 did not materialize in a vacuum. Like fungus in a damp climate, its growth was encouraged by a recent mushrooming of Islamophobia across America. Impassioned and hate-filled reactions to last spring’s announcement that a 13-story Muslim community center and mosque would be going up several blocks from New York City’s Ground Zero shifted into violence within months.

In May, a pipe bomb went off at a Florida mosque while 60 people were inside. In August, a knife-wielding passenger attacked his Muslim cab driver in New York City, and an arsonist damaged equipment at the site of a planned mosque in Murfreesboro, Tenn. In September, it took a phone call from Secretary of Defense Robert Gates to persuade Florida pastor Terry Jones to call off plans to lead “International Burn a Koran Day” on the anniversary of the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center. (Undaunted, Jones has now designated March 20 as “International Judge a Koran Day.” You can “burn it! Drown it! Shred it! Shoot it!” his church’s website proclaimed.)

Anti-Muslim activists helped S.Q. 755’s sponsors spread their message of intolerance and fear. Brigitte Gabriel’s ACT! For America spent $45,000 to promote the amendment, targeting voters with radio ads and robo-calls voiced by former CIA Director James Woolsey. By fall, ACT chapters had begun to spring up across Oklahoma.

Williams said the effect of his vote against putting the “Save Our State” amendment on the ballot was “painful” during campaign season. His Republican challenger sent out postcards with pictures of shadowy, burqua-clad figures, claiming that Williams wanted Shariah to be the law of the land. Williams beat him anyway, but only by a slim margin – 280 votes out of 9,500 cast.

Likely fearing a similar backlash, the Oklahoma business community was silent – even though the amendment could directly affect its interests. “It is a regular part of our transactional practice to deal with the laws of other nations,” said lawyer Louis Price of Oklahoma City’s McAfee & Taft. “When you’re dealing with a global economy, it’s hard to say ‘Yeah, you can do business with us, but only if you use our laws.’”

Asked if he expected anyone in business community to join Awad in his suit, Price said, “Individual businesses would tend not to pick fights on hypothetical matters. ... [A]nd [the amendment] is still a hypothetical for our concerns.”

Hypothetical or not, businesses did foresee the amendment could cause problems, and while they preferred not to “pick fights” themselves, they had little hesitation asking Awad and CAIR to fight on their behalf. “We had people in the business community calling and asking us to bring up the international law aspect in press conferences,” Awad told the Report. “I think they hoped someone else would stand up because they didn’t want to get muddied.”

Voters in other states may soon have to decide where they stand on the question of forbidding their judges to consider to Shariah law. Lawmakers in at least six states – Arizona, Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, Tennessee and Utah – made campaign promises to introduce similar proposals. Legislators in Wyoming and Texas have already introduced anti-Shariah resolutions, and the conservative American Center for Law and Justice (ACLJ) has pledged its support to states that need help writing and defending anti-Shariah laws. Jordan Sekulow, director of ACLJ international operations (his father, Jay, is the group’s chief counsel), is soliciting signatures for an online petition to ban Shariah law in U.S. courts. According to The Christian Century, Sekulow is also “advising” Oklahoma State Sen. Anthony Sykes, who co-authored and co-sponsored the resolution that became S.Q. 755.

While the ACLJ pursues its multi-platform anti-Muslim agenda, Awad also is fighting the battle on more than one front. In the court of law, he is on the offense. But in the court of public opinion, he must strike a careful balance between making his case against the law and being sensitive to the plight of his co-religionists across the state.

When Awad first came to Oklahoma, he believed that drawing attention to people spouting anti-Muslim vitriol would shame them into silence. But just a few months in the state have shattered that illusion, he told the Intelligence Report. “Some people,” he said, “can’t be shamed.” ▲

Growth in the hard core of the nativist movement is slowing as the battle over immigration moves into the nation's courts

BY HEIDI BEIRICH

Two major trends were evident last year in the hard-line anti-immigration movement. Most worryingly, a cadre of racial extremists began patrolling Arizona for undocumented border-crossers. Led by neo-Nazi J.T. Ready, they scour the deserts while armed with semi-automatic rifles and clad in fatigues, military-style helmets and Kevlar vests. Pictures of their exploits show terrified migrants forced to the ground by gun-toting captors.

At the same time, many nativist activists expanded their alliances with other far-right political movements, a trend that first began to take shape in 2009. In the past year, major nativist leaders have allied their organizations with antigovernment “Patriot” groups or fringe Tea Party factions. In some cases, they have created new far-right hybrid entities of their own.

Nativists received a burst of energy with the signing last April of Arizona’s S.B. 1070, a harsh anti-immigration ordinance that makes the failure of non-citizens to carry immigration documents a crime and obligates police to check immigration status when there is “reasonable suspicion” that someone is undocumented. Anti-immigrant groups were highly active in pushing for the law, which is currently held up in federal court. Legislators in several states are set to introduce copycats, which may further inflame anti-immigrant sentiment. Even so, the movement is no longer growing at the rapid pace of prior years.

According to the Southern Poverty Law Center’s (SPLC) latest count, the number of what the SPLC characterizes as “nativist extremist” groups — organizations that do not limit themselves to pushing for legislative change or more border patrols, but rather target suspected undocumented immigrants at work sites or when they cross the border — is up slightly, rising to 319 last year from 309 groups in 2009. Still, it is noteworthy that the movement’s rate of growth slowed considerably, with the three largest groups — the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps, the Minuteman Project, and the Federal Immigration Reform and Enforcement (FIRE) Coalition — staying about the same size as last year. In fact, without the activism surrounding S.B. 1070, the movement might well have shrunk in 2010.

The slowed growth of the movement is a big change. Between 2008 and 2009, the groups skyrocketed nearly 80%, rising to 309 from 173. A year earlier, the number of groups went up 20%, from 144 to 173. This slower growth is partly attributable to leadership battles that have drained the energy of some groups. It also reflects the relocation of some nativists into other sectors of the far right that have concerns beyond immigration.

As hard-line nativism has gone mainstream, the growth of anti-immigrant groups patrolling the border for crossing migrants has slowed.

Toil and Trouble

As neo-Nazis like one-time National Socialist Movement member J.T. Ready became more prominent on the nativist scene this past year, one of the major early nativist leaders exited the scene ignominiously. In June, allegations surfaced in court documents that Chris Simcox — arguably the highest profile individual in the movement, a man who co-founded of the Minuteman Project in 2005 and, later, founded the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps (MCDC) — had threatened to kill his wife and family in a 2009 domestic dispute. It turned out that a restraining order had been issued against Simcox in April, when his third wife, Alena, filed for divorce. This was not the first time that Simcox had been accused of violent behavior by a spouse. His second wife told the Intelligence Report in 2005 that she filed for full custody of their teenage son because she feared Simcox had suffered a mental breakdown, was sometimes violent and seemed dangerous.

In early July, after a short period when Simcox disappeared from public view (prompting one bounty hunter working for his wife to issue a “Wanted” poster), he released an E-newsletter, “The Simcox Report,” that defended his actions. In it, Simcox accused his wife of having been involved in an adulterous relationship with Stacy O’Connell, a former member of MCDC with whom Simcox had feuded for years (O’Connell and Alena Simcox denied the allegations). The soap opera intensified when it emerged that O’Connell ran the bounty hunting service that put up the “Wanted” poster for Simcox.

Meanwhile, MCDC’s leadership spent 2010 in complete disarray. When Simcox announced in April 2009 that he would run for the Arizona Senate seat held by John McCain, MCDC was left in the hands of his long-time lieutenant, Carmen Mercer. Mercer shut the organization down in March 2010, after being accused by Arizona's attorney general of involvement in a property scam.

In a March 22 E-mail to supporters announcing the shutdown, Mercer nevertheless encouraged former MCDC members to continue their work independently. "I predict Americans, on their own, will lock, load and do what the feckless cowards in Washington refuse to do — and frankly I hope Americans do take up arms to defend this great nation," she wrote in her "urgent alert."

This missive came after Mercer sent a hot-blooded E-mail out the week before urging supporters to bring their long arms to the border and to "forcefully engage" the "criminals" who try to cross without documentation.

Despite having claimed MCDC was no more, Mercer within a few months was again posting on MCDC's website as though nothing had happened.

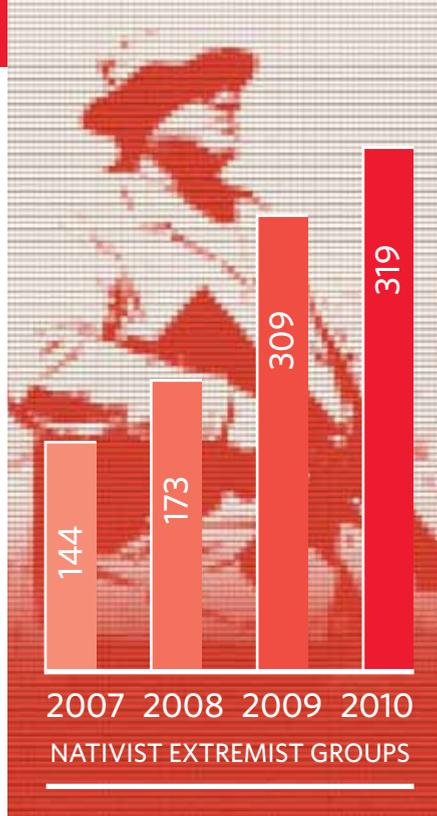

Long an Arizona entity, MCDC now lists Herndon, Va., as its headquarters address and sends those wishing to contact it by mail to the far-right advocacy group, Declaration Alliance, that is headed by conservative activist Alan Keyes. The alliance had long helped raise money for MCDC. But earlier this year, Mercer reported that MCDC was going broke after breaking off relations with the group. Apparently, they have now mended their rift.

The turmoil had little effect on the size of the group, which had 77 chapters in 30 states in 2010. That's up by two chapters from last year.

Building Bridges

Certain nativist extremists are gaining political muscle by building bridges to other kinds of far-right groups, with many nativists morphing into Tea Party activists or redefining themselves more broadly as opposed to the federal government's authority in general.

This trend began in 2009, when nativist extremist groups first began to find common cause with the antigovernment Patriot movement, which includes militias and similar groups. That the two movements dovetail in many ways is not entirely surprising. Both cotton and Revolutionary War rhetoric and imagery, and the first major nativist extremist group, the Minuteman Project, branded itself intentionally with a name right out of the American Revolution.

The Federal Immigration Reform and Enforcement Coalition (FIRE), which is the largest nativist extremist group with 136 chapters in 35 states (up one chapter from 2009), took up the antigovernment flag in 2009 when it launched The Patriot Coalition. FIRE is best known for a website that allows individuals to inform on employers of undocumented workers and for aggressive protests aimed at the undocumented.

In August, the group went one step further down the Patriot road, co-sponsoring a national conference in Pennsylvania that brought together a motley crew of far-right activists, conspiracy-minded groups like the John Birch Society and an array of other opponents of the Obama Administration. Patriot hero Richard Mack, a former Arizona sheriff who believes that county sheriffs are the highest authority and can ignore demands from the federal government, spoke to the conference. The event's core theme — "demand [states'] sovereignty from the tyranny of the Federal government"— sounded more like a paean to the Confederacy and

"states' rights" than a complaint about immigration.

FIRE National Director Jeff Lewis is active in several antigovernment groups, three of which he heads. Billing himself as "a direct descendant of the original American Revolutionaries," Lewis is listed as a delegate on the website of We the People (WTP), a federal government-hating outfit led by prominent tax protester Bob Schulz; he also participated in WTP's 2009 "Continental Congress" and is listed as a leader in the North Carolina chapter. (The congress issued documents warning that any infringement on the people's liberty as laid out in the Constitution is "an act of WAR" that "the People and their Militias have the Right and Duty to repel.")

Another example of a nativist-turned-patriot is Al Garza, who was vice president of MCDC until he quit the group in August 2009. Garza went on to form The Patriots Coalition, not to be confused with FIRE's Patriot Coalition, another group that merges the ideas of the nativist movement with those of the Patriots. Its website is filled with images of Revolutionary War troops and the Constitution and laments, "God and country are being taken away each day." Garza was helped in this effort by Joanne Daley, his local Tea Party coordinator, according to The Nation. Daley, who led protests against Obama's health care plan in Arizona and ran a Cochise County chapter of Glenn Beck's 9.12 Project, is on the group's board.

Arguably the most obnoxious nativist extremist, Jeff Schwilk, became a full-time antigovernment activist in 2010. Schwilk, founder of the San Diego Minutemen, has subsumed his anti-immigrant activities into a larger cause and now concentrates more on his Southern California Patriot Coalition, or SoCal Patriots. Instead of harassing migrant camps and pro-immigrant activists, Schwilk now focuses on gun rights and antigovernment issues. "Our fight is all political now," Schwilk told The Nation in October. "Our fight is in our cities, county and state, and federal governments."

Sipping With the Tea Parties

The Tea Party movement, too, has become home to many nativist extremists. These groups saw their interests first align during the healthcare debate, as medical coverage for undocumented immigrants became a flashpoint issue. The lines between the movements have become increasingly blurred, with leaders making official appearances at each other's events.

S.B. 1070, the Arizona law that requires police to ask for proof of legal residency from people they believe could be undocumented immigrants, helped to deepen this relationship. Tea Party activists gathered thousands of signatures in favor of the law and the Tea Party Nation, one of several Tea Party factions, co-sponsored a rally in support of the law in Phoenix on June 5.

Jim Gilchrist, who co-founded the Minuteman Project with Simcox in 2005 and now runs his own outfit of the same name, glommed on to the Tea Party movement in the last year. In late November, Gilchrist attended a "Minuteman Tea Party" event in Texas that his website claims had more than 2,000 attendees. Gilchrist hasn't been to the border in quite some time, preferring to work the right-wing circuit and post anti-immigration material on his website. Reaching out to the right has helped Gilchrist's Minuteman Project (MMP). It had 38 chapters in 2010, up from 35 the year before.

MMP Executive Director Stephen Eichler joined his colleague Gilchrist in the Tea Party movement. Eichler is now listed as the executive director (and "general trouble maker") on TeaParty.org. That Tea Party faction is led by Dale Robertson, who gained some notoriety for displaying arguably racist signs during protests of Obama's health care proposals. The anti-immigrant influence at TeaParty.org is clear. The site lists as part of its "non-negotiable core beliefs" that "Illegal Aliens Are Here illegally." The group also has issued E-mail alerts that blame an "illegal alien putsch" and "invasion" for "the pestilence of National Socialism" that it claims is on the rise in America.

At the Extremes

This January, Shawna Forde, formerly of the Gilchrist's Minuteman Project and then the leader of her own Minuteman

American Defense (MAD) group, was scheduled to go on trial in Arizona for the murder of a Latino man and his 9-year-old daughter. Forde's case is a reminder of how anti-immigrant fervor can explode into extreme violence. Pima County authorities allege that Forde and two accomplices, one of whom had ties to the neo-Nazi Aryan Nations, invaded their victims' home in search of drugs and cash to fund MAD border activities.

That tragic and horrifying incident makes the appearance of neo-Nazi J.T. Ready and his immigrant-hunting pals all the more worrisome. Until recently a member of the National Socialist Movement (NSM), Ready and his U.S. Border Rangers, an armed group largely peopled by other NSM members, have detained a number of migrants. Last July, Ready called a press conference in Pinal County's Vekol Valley, known as a drug trafficking and illegal immigration route, where he paraded his heavily armed group for the news cameras. "This is the Minuteman Project on steroids. We've got people with assault weapons. ... We will use lawful, deadly force when appropriate," Ready told a TV reporter.

One NSM member and avid patroller, Harry Hughes, posted to the Web plenty of photos of the migrants the group said it stopped. Hughes really doesn't like Mexicans, citing approvingly on his blog an article that says: "Mexican illegal aliens are revolting. And they know it. It is their purpose to disrupt us, interfere with us and give us diseases that we haven't had in this country for 100 years." Hughes' anger, by his own account, sometimes spills over into action. In July 2007, Hughes posted on a racist forum that he had shot a Mexican family's dog. Hughes said the charges were later dropped and "the Mexicans [sic] home mysteriously burned down." The NSM border outings are slated to continue.

What follows is a state-by-state tally of the 319 groups that the SPLC lists as nativist extremist groups. In the case of the three major formations — the Minuteman Civil Defense Corps, the Minuteman Project and the Federation Immigration Reform and Enforcement Coalition — acronyms have been added to help identify their affiliated chapters. >>

THE YEAR IN HATE & EXTREMISM

Led by the antigovernment 'Patriot' movement, the American radical right is continuing to expand rapidly

BY MARK POTOK ILLUSTRATION BY SEAN MCCABE

For the second year in a row, the radical right in America expanded explosively in 2010, driven by resentment over the changing racial demographics of the country, frustration over the government's handling of the economy, and the mainstreaming of conspiracy theories and other demonizing propaganda aimed at various minorities. For many on the radical right, anger is focusing on President Obama, who is seen as embodying everything that's wrong with the country.

Hate groups topped 1,000 for the first time since the Southern Poverty Law Center began counting such groups in the 1980s. Anti-immigrant vigilante groups, despite having some of the political wind taken out of their sails by the adoption of hard-line anti-immigration laws around the country, continued to rise slowly. But by far the most dramatic growth came in the antigovernment "Patriot" movement — conspiracy-minded organizations that see the federal government as their primary enemy — which gained more than 300 new groups, a jump of over 60%.

Taken together, these three strands of the radical right — the hatemongers, the nativists and the antigovernment zealots — increased from 1,753 groups in 2009 to 2,145 in 2010, a 22% rise. That followed a 2008-2009 increase of 40%.

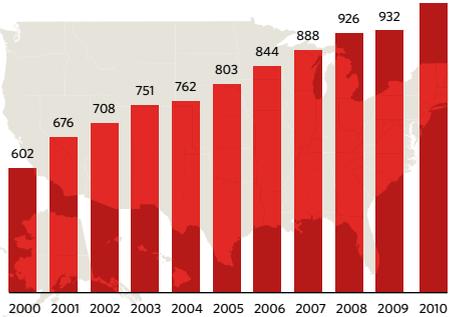

What may be most remarkable is that this growth of right-wing extremism came even as politicians around the country, blown by gusts from the Tea Parties and other conservative formations, tacked hard to the right, co-opting many of the issues important to extremists. Last April, for instance, Arizona Gov. Jan Brewer signed S.B. 1070, the harshest anti-immigrant law in memory, setting off a tsunami of proposals for similar laws across the country. Continuing growth of the radical right could be curtailed as a result of this shift, especially since Republicans, many of them highly conservative, recaptured the U.S. House last fall.

But despite those historic Republican gains, the early signs suggest that even as the more mainstream political right strengthens, the radical right has remained highly energized. In an 11-day period this January, a neo-Nazi was arrested headed for the Arizona border with a dozen homemade grenades; a terrorist bomb attack on a Martin Luther King Jr. Day parade in Spokane, Wash., was averted after police dismantled a sophisticated anti-personnel weapon; and a man who officials said had a long history of antigovernment activities was arrested outside a packed mosque in Dearborn, Mich., and charged with possessing explosives with unlawful intent. That's in addition, the same month, to the shooting of U.S. Rep. Gabrielle Giffords in Arizona, an attack that left six dead and may have had a political dimension.

It's also clear that other kinds of radical activity are on the rise. Since the murder last May 20 of two West Memphis, Ark., police officers by two members of the so-called "sovereign citizens" movement, police from around the country have contacted the Southern Poverty Law Center (SPLC) to report what one detective in Kentucky described as a "dramatic increase" in sovereign activity. Sovereign citizens, who, like militias, are part of the larger Patriot movement, believe that the federal government has no right to tax or regulate them and, as a result, often come into conflict with police and tax authorities. Another sign of their increased activity came early this year, when the

HATE GROUPS 2000-2010

PATRIOT & MILITIA GROUPS 1995-2010

Treasury Department, in a report assessing what the IRS faces in 2011, said its biggest challenge will be the “attacks and threats against IRS employees and facilities [that] have risen steadily in recent years.”

Extremist ideas have not been limited to the radical right; already this year, state legislators have offered up a raft of proposals influenced by such ideas. In Arizona, the author of the S.B. 1070 law — a man who just became Senate president on the basis of his harshly nativist rhetoric — proposed a law this January that would allow his state to refuse to obey any federal law or regulation it cared to. In Virginia, a state legislator wants to pass a law aimed at creating an alternative currency “in the event of the destruction of the Federal Reserve System’s currency” — a longstanding fear of right-wing extremists. And in Montana, a state senator is working to pass a statute called the “Sheriffs First Act” that would require federal law enforcement to ask local sheriffs’ permission to act in their counties or face jail. All three laws are almost certainly unconstitutional, legal experts say, and they all originate in ideas that first came from ideologues of the radical right.

There also are new attempts by nativist forces to roll back birthright citizenship, which makes all children born in the U.S. citizens. Such laws have been introduced this year in Congress, and a coalition of state legislators is promising to do the same in their states. And then there’s Oklahoma, where 70% of voters last November approved a measure to forbid judges to consider Islamic law in the state’s courtrooms (see story, p. 32) — a completely groundless fear, but one pushed nonetheless by Islamophobes. Since then, lawmakers have promised to pass similar laws in Arizona, Florida, Louisiana, South Carolina, Tennessee and Utah.

After the Giffords assassination attempt, a kind of national dialogue began about the political vitriol that increasingly passes for “mainstream” political debate. But it didn’t seem to get very far. Four days after the shooting, a campaign called the Civility Project — a two-year effort led by an evangelical conservative tied to top Republicans — said it was shutting down because of a lack of interest and furious opposition. “The worst E-mails I received about the Civility Project were from conservatives with just unbelievable language about communists and some words I wouldn’t use in this phone call,” director Mark DeMoss told The New York Times. “This political divide has become so sharp that everything is black and white, and too many conservatives can see no redeeming value in any” opponent.

A Washington Post/ABC News poll this January captured the atmosphere well. It found that 82% of Americans saw their country’s political discourse as “negative.” Even more remarkably, the poll determined that 49% thought that negative tone could or already had encouraged political violence.

Last year’s rise in hate groups (see map, p. 43, and list, p. 44) was the latest in a trend stretching all the way back to the year 2000, when the SPLC counted 602 such groups. Since then, they have risen steadily, mainly on the basis of exploiting the issue of undocumented immigration from Mexico and Central America. Last year, the number of hate groups rose to 1,002 from 932, a 7.5% increase over the previous year and a 66% rise since 2000.

At the same time, what the SPLC defines as “nativist extremist” groups — organizations that go beyond mere advocacy of restrictive immigration policy to actually confront or harass suspected immigrants or their employers — rose slightly, despite the fact that most of their key issues had been taken up by mainstream politicians (see story, p. 35, and list, p. 37). There were 319 such groups in 2010, up 3% from 309 in 2009.

But like the year before, it was the antigovernment Patriot groups that grew most dramatically (see list, p. 57), at least partly on the basis of furious rhetoric from the right aimed at the nation’s first black president — a man who has come to represent to at least some Americans ongoing changes in the racial makeup of the country. The Patriot groups, which had risen and fallen once before during the militia movement of the 1990s, first came roaring back in 2009, when they rose 244% to 512 from 149 a year earlier. In 2010, they rose again sharply, adding 312 new groups to reach 824, a 61% increase. The highest prior count of Patriot groups came in 1996, when the SPLC found 858 (see also chart, above).

It’s hard to predict where this volatile situation will lead. Conservatives last November made great gains and some of them are championing a surprising number of the issues pushed by the radical right — a fact that could help deflate some of the even more extreme political forces. But those GOP electoral advances also left the Congress divided and increasingly lined up against the Democratic president, which is likely to paralyze the country on such key issues as immigration reform.

What seems certain is that President Obama will continue to serve as a lightning rod for many on the political right, a man who represents both the federal government and the fact that the racial make-up of the United States is changing, something that upsets a significant number of white Americans. And that suggests that the polarized politics of this country could get worse before they get better. ▲

ACTIVE HATE GROUPS

IN THE UNITED STATES 2010

THIS LIST OF 1002 ACTIVE HATE GROUPS (MAP, P. 43), up from the 932 groups listed a year before, is based on information gathered by the Intelligence Project from hate group publications, citizen reports, law enforcement agencies, field sources and news reports. Only organizations known to be active in 2010, whether that activity included marches, rallies, speeches, meetings, leafletting, publishing literature or criminal acts, were counted in the listing. Entities that appear to exist only in cyberspace are not included because they are likely to be individual Web publishers who like to falsely portray themselves as powerful, organized groups. This listing contains all known chapters of hate organizations. If the group has a known headquarters, it appears first in the listing of the group's chapters, and is marked with an asterisk (*).

ACTIVE HATE
GROUP CHAPTERS

Groups are categorized as Ku Klux Klan, Neo-Nazi, White Nationalist, Racist Skinhead, Christian Identity, Neo-Confederate, Black Separatist, and General Hate. Because skinheads are migratory and often not affiliated with groups, this listing understates their numbers. Christian Identity describes a religion that is fundamentally racist and anti-Semitic. Black Separatist groups are organizations whose ideologies include tenets of racially based hatred. Neo-Confederate groups seek to revive many of the racist principles of the antebellum South. White Nationalist groups espouse white supremacy or white separatism but generally avoid anti-Semitism. General Hate groups espouse ideologies of hatred and include the sub-categories of Anti-Gay groups, Anti-Immigrant groups, Holocaust Denial groups, Racist Music labels, Radical Traditionalist Catholic groups (which reject core Catholic teachings and espouse anti-Semitism), and Other (a variety of groups endorsing a hodge-podge of hate doctrines).

Hate Websites in the U.S.

This list of 657 U.S.-based hate sites active on the World Wide Web in 2010 includes pages from Ku Klux Klan, Neo-Nazi, White Nationalist, Racist Skinhead, Christian Identity, Neo-Confederate, Black Separatist, and General Hate groups. Web sites tend to move from server to server or shut down without notice, so they may be hard to locate. Sites marked with an asterisk (*) are organizations that actively promote hate beyond the mere publishing of Internet material (see also hate group listing, p. 44). Their locations are listed.

'Patriot' Groups

The Intelligence Project identified 824 anti-government "Patriot" groups that were active in 2010. Of these groups, 330 were militias, marked with an asterisk, and the remainder includes "common-law" courts, publishers, ministries and citizens' groups. Generally, Patriot groups define themselves as opposed to the "New World Order," engage in groundless conspiracy theorizing, or advocate or adhere to extreme antigovernment doctrines. Listing here does not imply that the groups themselves advocate or engage in violence or other criminal activities, or are racist. The list was compiled from field reports, Patriot publications, the Internet, law enforcement sources and news reports. Groups are identified by the city, county or region where they are located.

'Patriot' Websites

This list of 484 sites on the World Wide Web includes pages linked to the anti-government "Patriot" movement, which generally defines itself as opposed to the "New World Order," engages in groundless conspiracy theorizing, or advocates or adheres to extreme antigovernment doctrines. Pages were current in 2010, but sites tend to move from server to server or shut down without notice, so they may be hard to locate. Of the sites, 110 were connected to militias or militia ideology; the rest, grouped in the Other Patriot category, include sites associated with "common-law courts," publishers, ministries and citizens' groups. Listing here does not imply that the individuals or groups with websites advocate or engage in violence or other criminal activity or are racist. Listings indicated with an asterisk (*) belong to actual groups that promote Patriot doctrine beyond the mere publishing of their Internet material.

Anti-Semitic ‘radical traditionalist’ Catholics insist the universe revolves around the Earth. The devil reportedly disagrees

BY ROBERT STEINBACK

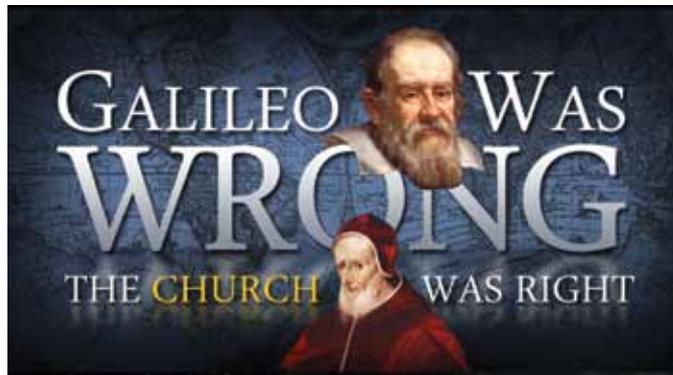

SOUTH BEND, IND. — IT TOOK SOME 350 years for the Roman Catholic Church to finally admit it was wrong to have found pioneering astronomer Galileo Galilei “vehemently suspect of heresy” in 1633 for affirming Nicolaus Copernicus’ groundbreaking 1543 theory that the earth and planets revolve around the sun. But there remains a strain of “radical traditionalist” Catholics who basically tore up Pope John Paul II’s 1992 acknowledgement and is still adamant that the Bible’s accounts of an earth-centered universe are literal truth — and that the church was right to convict the old stargazer all those years ago.

Eight of the world’s leading proponents of neo-Dark Ages cosmology (with one token dinosaur-age conspiracy theorist thrown in) met here on Nov. 6 for the First Annual Catholic Conference on Geocentrism — the theory that the earth sits motionless at the center of the universe. The one-day seminar was entitled, “Galileo Was Wrong: The Church Was Right.”

“Seminar” might be generous phrasing: The presentation was a mind-numbing, 15-hour-long sermon-cum-pep rally for radical traditionalist Catholic apologists desperate to debunk any science that suggests the Bible shouldn’t be interpreted literally. Numerous biblical passages describe the earth as at rest, with the sun in transit around it.

About 90 mostly Catholic devotees, curious skeptics and feisty college students who converged on South Bend endured a series of one-sided monologues declaring that theorists from Copernicus and Galileo to Einstein and Hawking were wrong about celestial physics. Though much of it was difficult for mathematical mortals to follow, the presenters’ gambit was clear enough: Can anyone really prove the earth isn’t sitting still? That’s tougher than it sounds: Even though astrophysicists tell us that every body in the universe is in motion, it will always appear that the thing you’re on is standing still relative to everything else.

A “geocentrist” conference held in Indiana used the same name as a book (above) co-authored by one of its main participants, Robert Sungenis. Sungenis rejects modern Catholic teachings on both the motion of the planets and toleration of the Jews.

“If we’re saying that the earth is in the center of the universe and it’s not moving, that means Someone, with a capital S, put it there,” said the conference’s principal speaker and emcee, Robert Sungenis, founder of Catholic Apologetics International. “You can’t have the earth at the center of the universe by chance. ... The devil is a powerful foe and he will use something like [the model of a sun-centered solar system] to win his battle. If [scientists] have to admit that the earth is in the center of the universe, where does the power shift back to? It shifts back to the church.”

Some of the South Bend presenters have taken their certainty about what they see as literal biblical truth to hateful extremes far more consequential than dismissing Galileo: Sungenis has published a number of venomously anti-Semitic screeds that drew official church condemnation and have rendered him unwelcome in most mainstream Catholic circles.

E. Michael Jones, who also was at the gathering, has used his South Bend-based magazine Culture Wars to viciously denounce the “Jewish world view” and has expressed enthusiasm for many core Nazi ideas about Jews (a sampling of his magazine’s cover stories: “Judaizing: Then and Now,” “The Judaism of Hitler” and “Shylock Comes to Notre Dame”). Martin G. Selbrede, who also spoke, is vice-president of the Chalcedon Foundation, the leading think tank of the Bible-literalist Christian Reconstruction theology; the foundation has never renounced the racist, homophobic and anti-Semitic views of its late founder, R.J. Rushdoony.

Except for some of Jones’ anti-Jewish books being offered for sale, there was little evidence of these unsavory connections at the conference.

The best moments of the gathering came when 15 or so bright college students finally got to confront the purported experts at the end of the long day. The panel struggled with and occasionally mocked their questions and host Sungenis at times seemed to bristle at the students’ audacity.

If such an attitude is typical of all like-minded theorists, it’s easy to scientifically postulate that geocentrism is a lot of solar hot air. ▲
